In 1860 Lincoln polled but 1,929 votes in the State, and Douglas 16,368. The rest of the votes were cast for Breckinridge and Bell, both Southern men, and out of a total vote of 74,323 the union party of these candidates was the smallest majority recorded.

The contest in Virginia was bitter as was before in the tidewater counties and the uplands. In the former were the old planters and their family connections gave them a social position and influence which they have continued to make the master, and, though their chief occupation in the years before the war was the fattening and sale of slaves often their own flesh and blood, they seemed to be the "salt of the earth" in fact "the aristocracy of the South."

The upland counties, though having few such men, were controlled by people with plantation pictures for the political supremacy, and often under the dominance extremely interesting. The old families were almost invariably found on the side of the Union, and were the final entrenchments and leaders of the uplands. Representatives of these people were sent to Richmond, Preston, Randolph and Wise; while A. H. H. Stuart and John Minor Botts were conspicuous among the latter, many of whom were Union men during the war.

Virginia was the birthplace of the destructive and ruinous doctrine of State sovereignty, out of which secession grew and the War. The continuous of '98 in Virginia and Kentucky were drawn up by Jefferson and Madison, natives of the former, and the extension and application of this principle then and subsequently in the slavery controversy were the essential of the fostering of State sovereignty was merely a rampart behind which the slave-breeders fought for their property in the territories.

The secession of Virginia was worth to the South more than the adhesion of any other three States. It prolonged the War for four years longer, and Virginia was from the beginning the actual theater of operations. Its proximity to the North insured the Federal Capital, while the Confederate Capital was nearly all within the limits of Virginia who it was known were most capable of protecting it. The Confederacy lost no important territory except as Virginia soil. Virginia gave to the Confederacy three of its five best generals—Lee, Jackson and Johnston; seven-tenths of Stuart, R. H. Hunter, as Minister to England, James M. Mason on the biggest theft, John B. Floyd. Virginia troops were conspicuous in every battle fought in the East, and the Northern soldiers who met them never had reason to doubt their bravery. Unquestionably the State of Virginia was the chief member of the Confederacy, leading all others in population, wealth, and resources of every description. Though Virginia was one of the last States to secede, and was taken out of the Union by a wreck, there is no doubt that a majority of the others, in the present territory at least, were heartily in favor of the War. The pretense of reluctance was the chief's of the ambitiousers of the people to give up the thousands of offices they were holding in Washington. But, once having gone over, the people were faithful to the end, and both the first and the last battles of the War were ably struggled excepted were fought on her soil.

With the characteristic obduracy of a Bourbon Commonwealth, the State which went into the War almost the last stayed in it the longest, and was one of the last three that came back. It was also among the first to reestablish the Democratic power on the ruins of the old aristocracy. The organization of the War Virginia as a State would naturally have given the Bourbons in the remaining fraction of the Old Dominion a great preponderance of power; but the entire enfranchisement of the negroes more than overcame this advantage. In 1867 a majority of the whites refused from voting for the new constitution to frame a Constitution, and of those who did vote eighty per cent opposed it. The new Constitution was not ratified until July 6, 1869; and Virginia was not readmitted by act of Congress until Jan. 26, 1870, being, with Mississippi and Texas, the last to come in. It is a singular fact that the State never had a straight Republican Governor elected by the people. Gilbert C. Walker, who was chosen in July, 1869, ran as a Conservative against H. H. Wells, Republican, and former military Governor, and was elected by 13,000 majority. He held office until 1874, and was succeeded by a Democrat. The State has had but one Republican senator, John F. Lewis, who has recently been elected Lieutenant-Governor. This brief review of the political history of Virginia may suffice to show how pure and unadulterated has been the quality of her Bourbonism since the Union was formed. If the end may be found by a coalition of progressive Democrats and Republicans to forget old hostilities and learn to govern wisely for the future—that this is a Nation—there is hope that many other Southern States will follow her example.

Virginia was the keystone of the arch forming the Solid South; now that she has been removed from that position, the rest of the fabric must fall in pieces.—Chicago Tribune.

The Democratic Tariff Complication.

The statesmen of the Democratic party are improving the period of rest between Presidential campaigns by quarreling organically on the tariff question. If we are not mistaken it was the Hon. J. Sterling Morton, of Nebraska, who started the ball rolling by asserting in his call for a Democratic State Convention that the time had come when the Democratic party must consult itself, study out its own principles and state the doctrine of free trade. Soon after Mr. Morton's declaration came the battle-cry from Senator Voorhees of Indiana, who insisted that no party could win that did not avow unconditional hostility to the tinsel-and-paper policy of protection. In this connection Mr. Voorhees was accompanied by Senator Beck, by Mr. Samuel J. Randall, of Pennsylvania, who made a speech a month ago which aroused would be an enormity. Then the newspapers joined in the turmoil. Mr. Watterson, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, sanguinary and furious autocrat finds it necessary to declare that the tariff question came to the unqualified support of Mr. Morton. "We want," says Mr. Watterson, "no more rag-and-pegs campaigns"—evidently referring to the Democratic victory of Cleveland and Hendricks—and no more nonsensical and nonexistent tickets. The country in Virginia and Kansas and Mr. Randall may fold their tents and silently steal away. Mr. Watterson, in other family connections gave them a social position and influence which they have continued to make the master, and, though their chief occupation in the years before the war was the fattening and sale of slaves often their own flesh and blood, they seemed to be the "salt of the earth" in fact "the aristocracy of the South."

Mr. Watterson, in other words, declares that if he took the field even the tariff issue would slide into the background. That ought to be an additional inducement for the Democrats to renominate him. N. Y. Tribune.

Mr. Watterson's remark that the Democrats were worsted in the tariff discussion of the last campaign because they were entangling alliance with power upon the Morey forgery and an effort to insert a signal into Mr. English's harness, is true so far as it goes. If he does not think they would be worsted again in a similar discussion, even if they concentrated their full brain power upon it, he has have the "tariff for revenue only" plank put into the platform of 1884 and invite a square issue on that alone. But the Democratic party will not him more than half way.—N. Y. Tribune.

Major Daniel, the defeated Bourbon candidate for Governor of Virginia, is stepping about in a very chirpy manner, and is predicting that his State will be solid again for the Democratic party before long. When he was congratulated on his high spirits recently, he said: "Why, I have not thought of politics since election." His observations upon Virginia sufficiently attest that.

CHRISTMAS STOCKINGS.

Dainty little stockings
Hanging in a row,
Ribbon at the top and seeded,
In the firelight's glow!

Carbonated sleepers
Ready to be filled;
Dreams of wonderment for things
Dazzling through each head!

Mother, stepping softly,
Peeps, a bit to-eager,
Blue eyes soon deepen
Just as usual dark.

Pussy tilts stockings
Hanging in a row,
Stuffed with sweet surprises,
Does! feels! sees!

Stares and hats an trumpets,
Rubber-headed balls,
Books and dolls and candies,
Nuts and sugar plums.

Little sleepers waking
Scream, what a noise!
Will you merry Christmas
Wish the girls and boys?

Nanette.

MAMMA'S CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

Mrs. Watrous had taken a great fancy to old-fashioned furniture. She already had a good deal that had been her grandmother's, and when she had sent her modern furniture to auction, she had bought enough from the garret and rubbed with linseed oil and vinegar till it shone like glass, and then her mahogany looked very handsome. Sometimes a boat-keeper serves nine or ten years on various boats before getting his captain's license. After all this he must pass a most rigid examination on all points of seamanship and navigation before the Board of Pilot Commissioners, and exhibit a thorough knowledge of the tides, rips, sands and all other phenomena of the harbor and coast from the piers of the East and North Rivers. But even after receiving his license he is not considered to wait years, until some pilot happens to die and leave a vacancy for him. The first year of pilotage he is granted a license to pilot vessels drawing nine feet of water, and for the succeeding year he is permitted to pilot vessels drawing eleven feet. If he passes a satisfactory examination the third year, he then receives a full license authorizing him to go to sea of any draught, and is then first called a branch, or full pilot.

This matter of draught often gives rise to amusing maneuvers between captain and pilot when the former is anxious, and declaring to evade a correct statement of the actual draught of the vessel at the time, and the latter in turn employing cunning devices to get at the truth without appearing to be aware of the game. Certain Venetia drawing under fourteen feet, but three dollars and seventy cents per foot. The dockage per day was a fixed sum, but was graded according to the draught of the vessel. Thus a vessel drawing under fourteen feet paid but three dollars and fifty cents per foot.

On receiving his license the pilot must give bonds for the proper discharge of his duty, and he is liable to be examined every two years, and may be called upon at any time to undergo examination. Should he decline to fill a vacancy or to board a vessel making signals for a pilot, he is also required to be temperate in his habits and of reputable character. The proper exercise of these regulations is a large degree insured by the great competition among the boats and the unceasing vigilance of each to detect delinquencies in his rivals.

The Old-Fashioned Stage-Coach.

It is hard not to feel a pang of regret when thinking that the days of the old stage-coach are numbered. Like the Indian, it has been driven farther and farther West as the railroads have been pushed on into newer country, and it will not be long before it will be entirely a thing of the past. The high, lumbering vehicle, with its six horses, its load of trunks and boxes, its jolted and uncomfortable passengers often lulled and relieved of their valuables by some successful road-agent, and Robert Hood, has served faithfully and well. It deserves some record in order that its history may serve to remind generations to come, whose comforts will be so thoroughly provided for that their pampered bodies will never receive a jar or bruise of the discomforts our fathers endured. It must not be that the annals of the stage-coach shall fail to be recorded in a pen that will do equate for the work. In many parts of New Mexico, Colorado and other Western States and Territories the stage-driver is in his glory. As his vehicle lowers down the steep mountain roads, his strength of arm taxed to the utmost to restrain the six spirited horses and hold back the coach, he feels a natural pride in his skill, which is shared by those whose safety depends upon it. In going from Espanola, the southern terminus of the Denver & Rio Grande, to Santa Fe, one has a taste of stage-coaching which is novel and enjoyable. The old-time ride around the mountains, with the curious red boulders and in sight of the snow capped Sangredo Cristo Mountains, down through the wild, rugged Comanche canon to the swift Rio Grande, here a rolling, rapid mountain torrent prepares the traveler for a sound night's sleep on the cots in the adobe store of the Mexican of Espanola. Early in the morning the stage rolls up which is to drop him through the sand hills and cedar forests to the capital of New Mexico. Those whose ideas of the vehicle are based on the true Concord coach of the nasty New Yorker, whose thin, because of his wealth, bangs on his hands, will be grievously disappointed when they see the canvas covered, rolling, unwieldy old coach which is to be their carriage. But if the discomforts are not so great as anticipated, and there is real enjoyment during all the days' ride among the sand hills aforesaid, fording the mountain creeks, crossing the dry beds of the rivers of actual draught at the outset at the time, and the latter in turn employing cunning devices to get at the truth without appearing to be aware of the game. The proper exercise of these regulations is to a large degree insured by the great competition among the boats and the unceasing vigilance of each to detect delinquencies in his rivals.

An Easy Position.

The attention of young men who desire an easy place is called to the business of a New York pilot, which is thus described in an illustrated paper in the Century:

The responsibility devolving on a pilot, and the extent of his qualifications may be partly appreciated when one learns that, immediately on boarding a vessel he takes command, and is answerable for any accident until he has discharged his duty of taking the vessel in or out of port. If any mishap befall the ship at that time he is liable to have his license revoked, and thus lose all further opportunity of plying his vocation. The New York pilot must, therefore, for the good of all concerned, pass through a long and rigorous course of training. He must serve, mess and boy, before the mast till he masters every problem in the management of every form of rig. To this he must add a thorough knowledge of navigation. Then he must convince the Board of Examination of boat-keeper, or pilot's mate, in that capacity he must serve three full years on one pilot-boat before he can be admitted for his examination for a license. If during all these years he has shown himself honest, sober, and a good sailor, and has had no hearing on the interests of the Union of large. At the time he was the Democratic candidate for President, and ought to have known what the war was taking about. Cannot Messrs. Watterson, Morton, Dana, Randall and Voorhees accept the definition of General Hancock and lapse back into apathy? Omaha Republican.

It is possible that Mr. Tilden is organizing a still battle for renomination in 1880? If he really wants to try it again, he ought to have an issue to present to the country. They have no hope of success, and the most discouraging sign for them will be to give them some funds to distribute. A candidate with a hatrel is what they want, and there are none such in sight except Mr. Tilden. It would give the Republicans great pleasure to see him in the field again. He represents some peculiar issues, and we undertake to say that if he took the field even the tariff issue would slide into the background. That ought to be an additional inducement for the Democrats to renominate him. N. Y. Tribune.

Mr. Watterson's remark that the Democrats were worsted in the tariff discussion of the last campaign because they were entangling alliance with power upon the Morey forgery and an effort to insert a signal into Mr. English's harness, is true so far as it goes. —A good way to serve oysters to tempt the appetite of an invalid is to make a stew wherein cream is substituted for milk: salt it well; then line a small vegetable dish with thin slices of toasted toast, and pour the stew in.

—An inventive genius filled a small tarleton sack with a spoonful of cayenne pepper and tacked it over a rat hole. When the rat bounced out his eyes were peppered by the sitting from the shaken sack. He smeared like a pig and escaped. The whole tribe have since migrated.

—Pork chops fried and served with apples are not to be frowned upon; but the meat is better in frying pan, with scatter a little sage and pepper and salt over it; cook thoroughly; if it is fat enough so that there is plenty of gravy, fry the sliced apples in that; if not, add a lump of butter. Brown the apples, and lay them over the pork.

—Jumbles made from this recipe are delicate and delicious: One cup of sugar, a pound each of butter, sugar and flour; four eggs; two teaspoonfuls of cream; add the well-sifted flour, and flavor with lemon or nutmeg. Roll out very thin, cut with fluted cutters, and bake in a quick oven.

The Magnificence of Old Venice.

The luxury and grandeur of the costumes worn by Venetian ladies trace their origin entirely to Venetian craftsmanship and taste. In the year 1562 the Venetians were compelled by a decree of the Council of Ten, in 1586, prohibited pearls of chance, the sale of cards and dice, and obliged servants to denounce their masters who had gambling parties in their houses. Yet their most love soon been repealed, for nowhere did gambling go on more lengthy than at Venice in later years; they were fined to do. They believe they now lost the capacity for mental labor, when the reverse is true. There is another aspect of the time, that we cannot well do well to think of, and that is that gambling will not decisively prevent good losses and the spirit and strength of youth and early womanhood as to be stingy with our money and lenity thread in the best things of this life.—Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

—Not a single horse, cow, sheep or hog should be kept on the farm this winter that has not a shelter to keep it comfortable. If this shelter has not yet been provided, lose no time in making it. Enough food will be saved in a single winter to make the shelter. Thousands of domestic animals die every winter that would survive if comfortable quarters were provided.

A Castle of Satisfaction.

This from the Cleveland (Ohio) Penny Press, carries its own suggestion: Recently meeting Mr. H. Hosier, treasurer of the Cleveland Herald, our representative inquired of that gentleman, after stating his intention, if he reasonable knew anything about the finest lithotone Remedy, St. Jacobs Oil. A smile played across Mr. Keffer's expressive face and his eyes twinkled merrily as he replied in the affirmative. I will not refrain to state my experience with it, and you may use it as you think best. Four years ago I sprained one of my ankles, as accident which, as you are aware, entails much suffering and sometimes leaves the limb in a condition to remind one of it for the old hurt. Unfortunately this result ensued. Whenever the weather became damp or any system disturbed, the slight est cold my ankle pained me. This went on intolerable for over three years, and I could not obtain relief. Last winter I applied the St. Jacobs Oil and it completely cured me. I have used about a pint of the pain.

A LADY who hesitated in Broadwood on "Esthetic Culture" was accounted at the dinner-table next day. Mrs. Grundy said she learned that the people supposed that was a medicine was some new kind of tonic drink.

The Trenton (N. J.) Gazette, mentions the case of Mr. John Weed, with the American Pottery Co., that city, who was cured by St. Jacobs Oil of an attack of rheumatism, which had rendered him to his bed for seventeen weeks. He praises it accordingly.

The days are getting short, and a good many people can sympathize with them.

LORD BYRON, in reference to a beautiful lady, says: "She has been long in the world, but not grounded till, just now she is dangerously sick of the small pox. Another lady, speaking of the ills that flesh is heir to, says: "Nothing in my house which promptly followed this happy remedy Salvation Oil. I have used it in my family for years and have had there the most perfect confidence in its merits. It is a perfect success in its strongest."

Mr. Charles A. Wilmer, advertising agent of the Cincinnati Enquirer, says: "I have for three years I had inflammatory rheumatism in the right knee and ankle, which caused me much pain and incommoded me greatly in walking. I used St. Jacobs Oil, and it cured me in a few days, and I have had no return of the disease since. I have since used it in my family with perfect success. I cheerfully recommend it to all sufferers."

A man's nerve sank in like a bell when it is rung for dinner.

TONY PASTOR IN TROUBLE.

Tony Pastor, of New York, who is now here with his inimitable troupe, is receiving a share of the hospitality of Cincinnati. Mr. Pastor is a man of high character, and is very popular with the press and society people of the United States. The engraving above is from a photograph taken recently, and found favor at the hands of the subject. Mr. Pastor is a man of fine physique, and his eyes twinkled merrily as he replied in the affirmative. I will not refrain to state my experience with it, and you may use it as you think best. Hashings from Hayes—By Otto

The days begin to lengthen.

Oh, that arm! That arose at the harvest season of the Harvesters at present.

There has been good skating on Susan lake for two or three weeks.

Dr. Lewis vaccinated 147 citizens on last Saturday.

The champion rooster of Hayes had its wing feathers cut.

We think Vanzee a luckless or Deacon but would be better than his present.

Mr. Booth has arrived and will make preparations to build his dock the coming winter.

The report of real estate transfers, time and the county, given by the SENTINEL is an interesting feature, and we hope will become a permanent item.

If every man would do his future duty as he would be done by, what a heaven-like world this would become.

You approach a man when in the past and his fill of roast turkey, garnished with fried oysters and cranberry sauce, with the corners chock full of old fashioned mince pie, and he is as amiable as an house goose.

Rev. John Crane, of Evangeline, has purchased a tract of land in Hayes, near Boston's Bay.

We were always under the impression that one of the inherent rights of the American people was equal taxation, but we don't understand how 80 acres of land can be assessed for four cents.

Glen hopes his readers had a Merry Christmas, and he wishes them a happy New Year.

Our Banks Letter

Mr. Willis Dingens has just received a new stock of general merchandise and holiday goods.

Banks moves along in the even tenor of sameness even to less than three per cent, a figure to attract the attention of the loan seeker.

Rev. James Reeves, Rector of the Congregational Church of Banks, L. M. Kanagy and wife as delegates, attended the Conference of the Cong. Churches of the Cheboygan district, at Kalkaska, during the week.

The pleasant weather, and the occasional showers during the last few weeks, has materially interfered with the sleighing, so that our farmers who all have two or three hay to haul off, have plenty of time to get out their winter's wood.

Mr. Charles Smith was seriously injured by a falling limb, on Tuesday last, while chopping in the woods. He had just recovered from a two weeks illness and was across down again it. Next day after examining his labors. His household effects together with those of Mrs. Sloan, his mother-in-law, and her home which they occupied together, were totally consumed by fire early last spring. Now that the main star of the household is circled down, let the friends and neighbors see to it, that they have all the aid that their circumstances may require.

Our schools are all in full blast—schools by men and women of ability and experience, and who have taught in the town more or less for the last ten years. Miss Kate Wagley, of Crown Village, is to wield the rod at Antrim that she has become a fixture there. Mr. E. E. Marshall, the good natured and kindly disposed old standby, whom no amount of thunder (or did thunder) would disturb, wields the birch, in the Atwood school. Mr. Carrie B. Yates, than whom there is none better, guides the young intellect in the Sec. district. Mr. P. H. Wilkinson, always faithful and ambitious to do the best by his patrons, holds forth in the Moore district. The Chamberlain district, I think, is to be supplied.

Attend, Mrs. Zeh, next.

The State Teacher's Association will meet in 31st annual session at Lansing on the 27th, 28th and 29th inst.

There is an improbable report that Wessen H. Vanderbilt is about to dispose of his railroad interests and retire from active life.

The Allegan Journal says that the whole Michigan Congressional delegation except Senator Cooley, will stop this winter at the National hotel, in Washington.

The congregation of the Rev. Dr. Storrs of the church of the Pilgrims, at Brooklyn, gave him $50,000 each the other night when they met at his house to celebrate the completion of the 25th year of his ministry.

The physician in charge of the jail in which Guiteau has been confined since July 30 testified that, in his opinion the prisoner is entirely sane. Having had ample opportunity to judge his opinion is worth something.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures all diseases of the throat, lungs and liver, caused by scrofulous humors, such as Consumption, Bronchitis, Severe Coughs, Asthma, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Erysipelas, Scrofula, Tumors, Salt Rheum, White Swellings, Hip-Joint Disease, Goitre or Thick Neck, and Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder. Sold by druggists.

Ohio Democrats are now claiming that the Republicans only have a majority of one in the Senate, and that the Democrats have control of both branches. The contest was hotly fought on one side and the candidates are of such high character on each side that neither party could take a defeat very hard. The politicians of the old and soldiers, from battles on the receive the hearty approval of all classes, men or no Washington Republican says: "If, by the aid of high abilities, and a Republican party spirit, Powell is to be from without to preside, he is going to preside over nothing but ashes, the Democratic party will have the control support of the party and of the friend element not of the party. We say this on the opinion of Hon. David Davis at the Bachus trial, who, in the reply to the query 'and how long do you think the Republican party will survive?' promptly answered, 'Till the Democratic party shall, and I think that the Democratic party has their destiny' but by no means will their lease again of the administration, and succeed in being reinstated.

It is about enough now that the sleighing or cutter clerk allows. Business is terrible for families. A New York lawyer, Mr. Shaw, testified on Friday that as long ago as 1852 Guiteau of the world in the prisons before he died—that the only real permanents to good he would get to read and would imitate Wilkes Booth and shoot him in public man. During the summer of the witness the criminal was seen to several times past and again who became completely violent and unsafe to be at large. Mr. Shaw's statement is exceedingly significant. It shows that the notion of moving himself notoriously in connection from himself a judgment in Guiteau. It is not of those years before the excitement arose which he expected would be reported brought him the appointment to the President finished. All his extensive dings store he left the Hotels Gazette his religious organs, by setting up of a worthless book his efforts to be are as a public lecturer and a mesmeric speaker, and his absurd attempt to start newspapers—are entirely accounted for by his morbid desire to make himself be conspicuous. A diseased and monstrous egotism and a total lack of moral discovery are his only mental amusements.

31 BALCH & COULTER.

—Jesse Lewis, nephew of Dr. L. Lewis of this place, is preparing to study medicine, and will soon leave to attend one of the leading Eclectic Colleges of the profession.

—Jake N. Hamilton removes his Traverse City wagon factory to Grand Rapids, early in January. A large manufactory will be opened, the principal business being the making of wheelbarrows.

—January 1st the G. R. & I. R. R. Co. withdrew all their local agencies in north eastern Michigan. After that time all business must be done directly with the land department at Grand Rapids.

—The Petoskey Record still dwells on short notice. Workmen chimers, yet how not told its readers what the matter is. Our neighbor will have to support it now again next fall for Governor, or bolt. Jud this down.

—W. S. George, for many years State [illegible] and editor of the Lansing Republican, and editor of the Lansing Republican died last week. Mr. George was one of the foremost journalists of the country, a man of fine attainments and excellent character.

—St. Ignace has extensive wood-yard there in this city, was wrecked, and recovered a portion. When he was able to perform his accustomed labor again, he went to the Government to that effect and obtained his pension stopped.

—Regular communication of Charlevoix Lodge, F. & A. M., Tuesday evening, Jan. 3, work on Third Degree. Also special communication Tuesday evening, Jan. 10, for work on Second Degree. Essential attendance in all. By order of W. M.

—For the reason that we were in ignorance of the event, we neglected to speak of the marriage of Mr. Gurley Book to Miss Maggie Saunders on the Sabbath previous. The young couple have the Sentinel's best wishes for a long life of happiness.

—Messrs. W. Brackley, of Stanton, has sold over 1,000 cases of stamp land during the past year, and a half dozen acres of the same belonged to Mr. Brackley. These deeds were sold in lots of from 10 to 20 acres to actual settlers who are now clearing them up.

—The weather up to last Wednesday was exceptionally warm and pleasant, no snow to speak of, and no overcoats. Winter comes rushing in on us however, and sleighs take the place of wagons. Ice not active in its growth as for late in the season, and everybody looks elated.

—Col. G. Stebbins of Vermontville, having purchased 40 acres of timber in Mancelona and is extensively [illegible] the wheat as it falls in a heavy mass for hopper, has caught a big pile of old nails, nuts, screws, etc., and is thanking every farmer's source that he would in clean coal nothing but to be taken a search hereto.

—The Masonic Hall, in the evening of St. John's Day, was a most social affair, all things considered, about 60 couple participated, owing to the bad condition of the roads.—In the early part of the evening Hon. E. H. Green, representing the Most Worshipful Grand Master, installed the officers of the Lodge, in the presence of the lodge and a number of the wives and friends of members.

—Cheboygan Tribune—Another scion from Capt. Bourchard, with the Van Haalen, intends to call at Beaver Island on his Mississippi route, and to do so, will be compelled to make part of his turn in the night and will necessitate state rooms, as excursions are soon to commence on building her upper deck. The cabin and dining rooms will remain about the same size. Nine state rooms will be added.

—We think, to the way of retrenchment the Government should abolish that extreme known as the "Mackinaw Indian Agency." Gen. W. Lee is fond of calling the Indians "his children", but when they have the small pox he is confined to his house with typhoid fever. It has been often demonstrated that the Michigan Indians can get along without the aid of an agent, and we know now that they can get along without Gen. W. Lee, and the sooner his self-constituted paternity is annulled the better.

—Joseph Hancock, grandfather of the Hancock boys, who were lost at Muskegon years last fall, has been spending the last three months here, and left for the home of a daughter in Iowa last Tuesday. An ordinary observer would not class him beyond the line of a respectable old age, yet numerous summers have passed over his head, coming and going without silvering his black locks, or impairing his mental faculties. His hair is black, and with the exception of rheumatism, his health is good. Last fall he dug 214 bushels of potatoes on the farm of Medad Thompson, that aged father in Israel, whose white hair and trembling hand betokened second childhood, yet Mr. Hancock is old enough to be his father. The old man expects to see over one hundred, and hopes to reach the age of Moses—120. He was born in 1785, and was fourteen years old when Washington died. His mind can reach back over events in American history which almost span its existence. The old man who is with us to-day lived during the revolution,—a living link between to-day and the events of almost a century ago.

Santa Claus passed through town.

A Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to all.

The people of this town concluded to celebrate Christmas, by having a large Christmas tree in the hall of Sol. Isaman's new store. Two fine balsam fir trees were planted and well loaded with many rich and beautiful presents, for both old and young. But instead of the festivity being of a usual merry one, it was a sad one.—Early in the evening, just as services had commenced at the hall, it was announced that "a man was drowned in the Arm." Every family present had friends or relatives who had not arrived, but were expected to come. So many thought "perhaps it is my friend"—a hat and bag was found, but neither of those seemed to give any clue to the identity of the unfortunate owner. Search was immediately made, and in about twenty minutes the body was recovered, which proved to be a Mr. Babcock—he broke through the ice near Rosper's dock. Mr. Babcock came to this town nearly two years ago—he lost his wife last July—he leaves three little children. This evening he came to town to do some trading and get some presents for his little ones, but after doing his trading, he left his horse and buggy at Cobb's store and proceeded across the ice. He cried for help, and planks were thrown to him, but without avail. Mr. S. Rosper succeeded in getting within a few feet of him, and as he went down the last time, he said "I am going down for the last time." The body, after its recovery, was conveyed to Mr. R. Chadbeck's hotel, and tidings of the sad affair was dispatched to the kith ones, who anxiously watched for the return of their father and presents.

OMEGA.

Lalitte, the Pirate.

Jean Lafitta was born on the Garonne, and not at Marseilles, and was from his very boyhood apprenticed to the ocean. His family for many generations had for an ideal name of the most skilful seaman and daring privateersman of Bayonne. In the war of the French revolution, when the commerce of his native province was almost destroyed, he embarked as Lieutenant on board of a private armed vessel, which, after a brilliant career, was finally captured and carried into an English port. Here young Lafitte, with a number of other officers, was soon sent back on parole. Time passed; the Captain, in twelve Lieutenants, the common men own, obtained freedom, but Lafitte himself remained prisoner. His friends, however, and relatives left nothing undone to procure his release. Several times spurious papers of equal rank sent into English ports through the agency of his old Captain, in order to be exchanged for him, but it was not till many long years had passed that liberty found him in the end. This long imprisonment proved in him an almost savage instinct for vengeance against his England, and on his release he returned immediately to privateering, principally for the benefit of his native land and the English shipping and English commerce.

The treaty of Fontainbleau and the subsequent pacification of Europe deprived him of the glorious field of action, thinning his ranks. But long years of subtle breeding in the dangerous life of English gaol-birds during his night watches afterward on the lonely sea, had destroyed in him all sense of mercy or pity for human laws, and he determined to continue his career. As it was only against England he sought revenge, he never attacked any but English vessels. He obtained in France board of a large corsair with pain, and remonstrated with him earnestly and tearfully. But Lafitte was inexorable. He found a vessel in a great hurry to leave the port of Bordeaux, and by the promise of a share in many long years, the name of the wealthy owner ceased to be spoken in the household of its father, and children, whose sons had found kindred to his own, grew up to manhood ignorant of his very existence.

The subsequent career of Lafitte is well known. Provided with commissions of privacy only as British vessels, he paid no regard to the flag of any other nation. For a long period he had under his command a large force, which did great good in the Buccaneering days of the Pirate of the Gulf and the terror of British commerce in American waters. His name will descend to the latest times in Britain from the Gulf to Behring's Straits as the accredited Terror of the Seas, and, both personal, he could regard the days of Buccaneers and Pirates as the days of his own youth, and his career as the most successful of the whole.

Lafitte's subsequent career when he was no longer a Buccaneer, but a Pirate, was remarkable. He carried on his depredations almost entirely in the Gulf of Mexico, and his many islands, or, passing through Little Lafourche Bayou, or through Bayou Barataria and Lake Oneida into Bayou des Allemands, he successfully eluded the vigilance of his pursuers, holding high revel with his desperadoes ashore within hearing of both State and National forces.

The last act of his eventful career was in 1814, when he had been offered for his valuable services to the English, and he accepted the offer, and one of Lafitte's vessels, with the "stripes" are already formed, and it will not be long before others follow in the evening, being expected to produce a sensation that will cause a thrill to run through the form of a brilliant. Its great purity of color and compactness of shape make it a beautiful object, even in its present rough state.

Mr. Streeter shows near it models of other famous diamonds, the Koh I-Noor (106 1-16 carats), with which Mr. Rhodes has been credited by the Queen's partner, to compare it at Windsor, the Star of South (the great Brazilian stone), the Braden Brun, etc., together with the unique jewel the Mocbel diamond, in which another stone has been imbedded in some freak of nature. It was interesting to compare with these gems the more valuable jewel from South Africa, and the comparison was enjoyed on Saturday by a number of gentlemen among whom were many members of the Cape Parliamentary Mission, and Lord E. Churchill and others. The diamond was shown to the Queen and to

President Garfield's Masonic Record

The following is the official Masonic record of the late President Garfield. He was initiated Nov. 19, 1861, and passed Dec. 3, 1861, in Magnolia Lodge, No. 20 Columbus, Ohio. At the request of this lodge he was raised Nov. 22, 1863, in Columbia Lodge, No. 30, of Columbus. Franklin county, O. During the year 1863 he was a visitor in Garrettsville Lodge, No. 246, of Garrettsville, Portage county, O. He affiliated with this lodge Oct. 10, 1866, and continued a member until 1870, having served as its Chaplain during 1868 and 1869. He was a charter member of Pentalpha Lodge, No. 23, of Washington, D. C. He petitioned Columbus R. A. Chapter 15, Maryland and District of Columbia, April 4, 1866, and under dispensation was elected and received the Mark degree on the same date. He received the Past and M. E. degrees April 18, 1866, and was exalted April 18, 1866. He petitioned Columbia Commandery, No. 2, K. T. of Washington, D. C., April 27, 1866, and was elected May 4, 1866. He received the orders of R. C. K. T. and K. of M., May 18, 1866. He was elected a member of King Solomon's Lodge, No. 2, F. and A. A., June 1, 1866, and received the degree of Select Architect and Most Excellent Architect in that lodge Feb. 2, 1874. He received the fourth and fifth degrees in Mithraic Lodge of Perfection, A. and A. S. Rite, May 2, 1874, eight other degrees during 1871, and the fourteenth degree July 2, 1872.

Tilden for 1884.

The supporters of Samuel J. Tilden are early in the field for 1884. Already several of the principal Democratic papers of the state of New York, Ohio, Kentucky, Maryland, and other portions of the Union have begun their blowing for Tilden for the next Democratic nominee for the presidency. Montgomery Blair is out with a manifesto in the New York Sun in favor of Tilden's nomination.

It appears that the public mind requires of the Democratic managers, as a condition of success, that their candidate for the presidency shall be a representative man of the great principles which it is now asserting; and that it will not permit one who has distinguished himself by the assertion of those principles, and who for that reason has been elected president by the people and deposed from this office by a conspiracy against popular government, to be superseded as the Democratic candidate by the conspirators, even though an honorable gentlemen is honored in his place, and is supported earnestly by the victim of the conspiracy. There are other considerations seem to me to make it too plain for argument that Tilden is the man around whom the Democracy should rally for 1884. He is the representative man of the national Democracy which has been proscribed for its antagonism to secession and to the corruption and fraud engendered by it. He represents, therefore, principles and ideas far dearer to the people than those which drew their hearts to Andrew Jackson, and the hero of New Orleans himself would not more be suppressed by the people with more enthusiasm.

A writer in the Chicago Times shields Hancock down the wind and truly says: "The Democrats never gain anything by putting up a Union General." They have tried that dodge twice and ignominiously failed. Even Horace Greeley could not save them. Would Blaine fare any better? Sammy's nomination is what the confederate brigadiers are sighing for. Everything bids fair that Tilden will be the Democratic presidential nominee in 1884. This will make New York again the battle ground. New York is Republican every time with an honest vote.

There is now a new sensation in the Guiteau trial, which arises from the suspicion that he is the author of the celebrated Morey letter, which was a forgery, and came near defeating Garfield's election to the Presidency. The handwriting is so similar that it leads to the conclusion that he is the author. He had just been kicked out of the Republican headquarters in N. Y. City as a worthless dead beat, of no account whatever to the party, and he was still hanging around the city when the letter was published.

Alfred Krupp, the owner and creator of the largest gun-foundry in the world, seems to be a greater hero in war-loving Germany than the Chancellor himself. Krupp was born at Essen on April 11, 1811, and as his father was a gun-maker, the boy made toys of fire arms. The lad's genius outstripped all precedent, and more than keeping pace with modern invention he devised implements of death which have terrorized soldiers of nearly every nation.

In his recent lecture, Scoville complained that the press and the pulpit do not manifest a disposition to give Guiteau a "fair trial." We do not know what Mr. Scoville would consider a "fair trial," but at this distance from the Washington Court House, it looks as though the assassin and his counsel are having things pretty much their own way.

It is as much the duty of all good men to protect and defend the reputation of worthy public servants, as to detect public rascals.

The Catholics in Politics.

The Western Home Journal (Catholic) printed at Detroit, has an able communication on the above subject which should attract the attention of all Catholics. The article admits the natural tendency of Catholics to the Democratic party for various reasons which it assigns good during the first half of the century, which reasons we are not disposed to combat. The article says:

Our loyalty for nearly a century, has been undoubted, and it is a political wonder, since it is seldom that men remember their friends as we have done. With them, if the Catholics can eat with sincerity, that his convictions urge him to change his political faith, he do so is entirely legitimate.

The writer proceeds to consider the relation of parties and while in the main correct in stating that the parties have the same basis of opinion, draws conclusions therefrom which will attract wide spread attentions, and could have been better reached by direct logical methods and procedure:

If this be so there is no reason why Catholics should not divide their vote, and from the standpoint of expediency, there are decided arguments in favor of this course. If we are found in large numbers in the two leading parties, both will be friendly to us. On the other hand if we all cast the same ballot, we diminish our political strength. The party that receives from us but weak support can antagonize us with impunity, and is almost provoked to do so on account of our show of identification with its rival. Protestants have a marked advantage over us in this respect, since they are to be found in every party, and therefore no organization is ranged against them. Very likely the provision in our national constitution protecting religious freedom sprang from this very cause, since all creeds were represented in the convention which framed it. The Catholic population of this city is about 40,000 and therefore it can be seen at a glance what influence we could wield were we equally divided in political complexion. The Democratic party of today, in so far as it is friendly to us, is so simply on account of our votes. The protestants, even when a Democrat, is well-disposed to politics to us. While Democrats were loyal to us in the beginning, perhaps on principle to-day there are selfish motives—It is true that Republicans have been regarded as inimical to us in the past, and yet this is not so because of unfriendly treatment on their part. As an organization they have done us no injury, but, on the other hand, have frequently befriended us. In all probability, they have been regarded as hostile only because the views of our political opponents were so their political associates to the extent that other denominations are, they would probably show quite as much attachment for us as the Democrats, and for the same reason. It cannot be too often repeated that many Catholics of every party are at best neutral in regard to us, though their professions may be friendly. There are some honorable exceptions, but, in this respect, the Democrats have no claim to precedence. Perhaps the Catholics of this city have never had a better friend than the late Gov. Bagley. He remembered our charitable institutions in life also in death. A man should certainly be sincere when on the verge of the grave, and, standing there, he dispensed his benefactions to our orphans and little sisters of the poor. He did more. His will contains a tribute to the character of the latter which is worthy of the pen of the most devoted Catholics.

Let, then, Catholics, in the future, be independent in political thought and action. Recollection of services rendered them by the Democratic party, while praiseworthy, should not hamper them, since they are no longer its bidders.—Their friends of every, therefore, should unanimously second us in the entire freedom of action which they concede to others.

Upon which the Petoskey Gazette comments:

The article indicates a new departure on the part of Catholic voters. At the last fall's election in New York, and at the presidential election, large bodies, sometimes hundreds in a single community, voted solidly republican. The course pursued by Col. John Atkinson, whose flaming letter six some weeks since published, is in accord with the movement in political independence of Democratic prelates by Catholics, and has had a wide spread influence.

Duncan C. Ross, the champion wrestler of America, has issued a challenge to Wm. Muldoon for $500 to $1000 a side for a mixed contest, three best in five, Ross agreeing to give Muldoon two falls without contesting. He also challenges any man in the world to a mixed contest for any sum up to $1000.

In a case involving a patent for an improvement for corset springs, in the U. S. Supreme Court, a recent decision holds that by allowing it to be generally used for two years the inventor abandoned it to the public, and cannot complain of an infringement.

The Senate has confirmed ex-Senator Frelinghuysen, as Secretary of State, Ex-Senator Howe, of Wisconsin, as Postmaster General, and T. T. Bates as Postmaster at Traverse City.

General and Mrs. Grant have accepted an invitation from President Arthur to spend the month of January at the white house. They will be there to receive with him on New Years day.

Post and Tribune.

The Leading Newspaper of MICHIGAN.

Radically and Consistently
REPUBLICAN.

The Detroit Post and Tribune has an established reputation as one of the leading newspapers of the great northwest, and is the foremost exponent of Republican principles in Michigan. During the coming year no effort will be spared to maintain its proud preeminence. The year will be one of great commercial and political activity, and the paper should be read in every family in the state.

The new department of the Post and Tribune will be especially full and complete. Its large force of state correspondents, its special correspondents in New York, Washington, Chicago and other news centres of the country, and its large and well organized force in the home office, leave it without a rival in Michigan in its facilities for gathering and presenting the news of the day, whether local, state or national.

By the railroad construction of the present year the different sections of Michigan are more closely linked than ever before. It will be the aim of the Post and Tribune to furnish full and timely information of all industrial movements, and of all material progress made in every portion of the state.

The editorial page of the paper will keep abreast of the current of the times, and discuss every subject of interest to the people in the manner that can be ordained from strong available sources, all means suggested by current events. It will support zealously the principles of the Republican party, and will add to the utmost of its ability in advancing a pure, honest and economical administration of public affairs.

Its commercial reports have been recently extended and will be kept full and accurate.

In its miscellaneous department it will furnish the choicest of reading matter, both in prose and verse, original and selected. It will be kept pure in its tone, always clean in tone and in sympathy with the best moral sentiment in the community.

For the rural and village community the Weekly Post and Tribune is especially valuable. The Letter Box, founded in the course of the year a vast amount of valuable information on interesting variety of topics. The Health and Hall Exercises, an admirable medium for exchanging views upon home subjects. The Agricultural Department and Farmer's Letter Box, which have recently been enlarged in their scope, are invaluable to all interest of the soil. In short, no effort or expense will be spared in making the Post and Tribune the most attractive, best arranged and most complete Family Newspaper ever published in Michigan, a state, the sterlage worth of whose people it admires and in whose progress and prosperity it has shared.

To Prayer.

The Evangelical Alliance of Traverse has appointed the following programme for the week of prayer on the opening of the year, 1882:

Sunday, January 1. Renewed consecration.

Monday, January 2. Humiliation for the blessings, temporal and spiritual, of the past year, and prayers for their continuance.

Tuesday, January 3. Humiliation and confession on account of each Bible, social and national sin.

Wednesday, January 4. Prayer for the blessing of God on the family and the world.

Thursday, January 5. Prayer for the young and for a revival of religion among them.

Friday, January 6. Prayer for universal prevalence of peace and righteousness.

Saturday, January 7. Prayer for the universal prevalence of truth and righteousness, the outpouring of the Holy Spirit and conversion of the world.

Hearings from Hayes—By Giny.

On the snow the hounds are baying,
Reckless'll, Chase is racing around and around of Pennsey.

Jacob E. Chase is home from Bertie Falls on a two weeks visit.

We wonder whether those men who are so fond of their own intellects would like to exchange one for their dog's.

The weather bureau sent us all the seven days preceding and the seven days succeeding the winter solstice. Don't it look as though days, which would have been very appropriate this year.

Every thing quiet in the valley of Nod since the last battle, and the event has already passed into history in the annals of a peace which has been hunted up, but too lengthy for publication.

Dr. Lewis grounded certain theories that he would come out and on the sound of their mess became so sure in a conviction that they could not attend to it. Now the Doctor had better send out some more choppers, for there are some sore arms in Hayes that are likely to require his services next six months.

We suppose some sand in Hayes should be called on a fire in a very serious manner, but if the death of a young woman set out of her teens of the most low, repulsive, loathsome disease that the human system is afflicted with, and the sacrifice of women seemed insane admonition, it seems not to suit in this country to excite us for decent burial for man of humanity contaminated with the vilest diseases, and a horrible death in the wretchedest to the same.

Mr. Peter Kent and wife celebrated their tin wedding Saturday last, 21. At an early hour the invited guests began to arrive with their presents of tinware, and reminded us of the beside of the Israelites. The dinner was sumptuous and every guest did a noble justice. Gent was boosted at the head of the table where he had full swing of both sexes, and you can imagine the result. Suffice me to say enough to wish for such an occurrence three times a day unless basket pinch thrown in between. We might make personal mention of some others who seemed to enjoy eating and only ten pound between mouthfuls. The day was enjoyable and many lords in response to prayer as ture was happy. We noticed two or three robbing their heads together, having them on pressure as usual, for the spring politicians unstopples. As old Sol slipped away toward the hamlet land the silk tube over green and wishes to thank Kase and wife for many reminiscences of this their silver anniversary.

Manners and Customs of the Indians in Mexico.

The way of living of the Mexican Indian is generally very simple. Indian corn is the principal food in the temperate zone, while the banana is eaten by those who inhabit the hot zone. Maiz and bananas grow without any exertion on the part of the cultivator, and we are generally fed both fruits growing in abundance around the Indian huts. Next to maiz and bananas, frijoles (beans) are cherished by the redskins. Meat is seldom eaten, and that which is dried and cut up into long strips. Eggs, however, are much liked, and we seldom find a hut without chickens. Tortillas, a kind of hoecake, are served on holidays or entertainments in the town after the Indian has disposed of his fruits in the market. The favorite beverage is pulque, an extract of the agave plant. Pulque, taken in moderate portions, is wholesome; but taken to excess it is rather intoxicating. Do well-to-do days we find many Indians drunk, after having invested their last cent in the favorite beverage. In former times it was the exclusive right of the priests to get intoxicated. In the days of montezuma progress the privilege is shared by the vulgar as well. The common Indian garb is sometimes not as a vice, but as the ne plus ultra of all earthly requirements. Yet the aristocrats seem not always to shine conspicuously by the side of the drunkard—are often arrested and hauled up.

As simple as his manner of living is the Indian's clothing. The materials are cotton and woolen, and are manufactured by the weavers themselves. The shirt, if such is worn, is roughly made of cotton. The men wear wide trousers, which seldom reach below the knee, and which are fastened with a sash in the same manner as the trousers worn by the inhabitants of the Eastern countries. Instead of suspenders, adorned with silver buttons or coins, are only worn by those in the service of a rather affluent master, and the happy possessors are proud of them. Finally, when the visit of some friend or fashionable stranger keeps its members from seeking their couch at an early hour, the Indian unbuckles the buckles and the coral. The mantle is a smooth, stout piece of woolen cloth, and serves to guard the Indian from rain and the evening air. The coral is an earthen vessel that serves to prepare the favorite tortillas. A gourd bottle for water completes the Indian's movable property.—Ber. N. Y. Evening Post.

Fashions for Gentlemen.

Gentlemen are emerging from the plain dark clothes worn so long to bright coloring now so fashionable in ladies' dress. Three different classes of goods are often seen in one suit, one for vest or scottie is of the most flaming hue. Moorish and Oriental colorings and designs are shown in the various styles of neckwear, and the fashionable vest is in bright and pretty stuffs. The prevailing style of vest is single-breasted, without collar, cloth cut short and cut straight across the bottom. Double-breasted vests are not worn. Garments of all kinds have never been worn so high at the neck as now. There is a tendency to put the braid on almost all classes of goods except fancy suitings. Braids of various widths are used, the six and eight line being most in favor. The tight trousers are out by all the fine tailors in New York, and such a thing as loose pantaloons is not known; but this is not the case in London, as the leading tailors there cut the trousers as large as were being worn here years ago.

Fancy mixtures are in demand for frock-suits, frock-coats, and overcoats. Light gray mixtures with smooth surfaces are used for dress overcoats, and green also is in favor. The general tendency now is to put on goods, and the Scotch suitings are more popular than they have been for several seasons past. Pin-checks are still in fashion, and some make them in cutaway coats to be worn with trousers and vest of one color. For overcoats there are the Elysians. Shetlands, for sleevers and Montagnacs, and many kinds of plain goods.

The entire suit (made of one kind of cloth) is only admissible for business purposes or for traveling. The shetland breasted sackcoat is cut with a light double breast and narrow lapel, with five buttons to close. It is shapely at the back, and the sleeves are cut small and cramped. (All sleeves, including overcoat-sleeves, are cut thus.) The cuffs are stitched on about two inches deep and finished with one button. For a man five feet eight inches the fashionable length is from twenty-nine to thirty inches. These sack-suits are usually made of fancy cassimere. Young men who find the sack-suit particularly becoming to their figures have a double-breasted sack-suit, with black tie and gloves of light gray color for a morning wedding the bride would be dressed in dark colors, in which case the gentleman should appear in a dark frock-suit, with a plain dark tie or scarf, with gloves of light color, and stylish gaiters, with kid tops.

Gentlemen have worn pants with very narrow bottoms for some time past; but they fall the introduction of wide-bottomed pants for the ladies has made a change in gentlemen's pants. The rims are much wider, and a bell-crown with a wide rim, it is said, is gradually coming into fashion.—N. Y. Herald.

Red Tape in Mexico.

The following from the Tucson (Arizona) Citizen will give some idea of the difficulties of railroading in Mexico. The road from Guaymas to Guadalupe is now being run under circumstances that seem to be unique. Open completion of the road the company arranged their tariff and time-table and began business, whereupon they were assailed to suspend traffic until the proper authority inspected the road and tariff rates, and secured their approval by the General Government, as it would require fully two months for this official to go to the City of Mexico, and an equal length of time to return, the matter became one of serious importance to the Southern Pacific Company. At this juncture Gov. Gritz came to the rescue of the company, and assumed officially and personally the responsibilities connected with the operations of the road, and he now issues orders and permits for transportation. The passenger tickets are four by fourteen inches in size, are covered entirely by writing and printing, and have been signed by the Governor and his Secretary, and the official seal seal is attached. This formidable document entitles the holder to a ride of a few hours from Hermosillo to Guaymas.

—Australia imported English sparrows to kill worms, but it is found that the birds are the worst pest of the time, and bounties are offered for their destruction.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—Berlin has a population of 1,130,000 and church sittings for only 130,000.

—The Presbyterian Church at Mount Paran, Ind., celebrated recently its 166th anniversary.

—The teaching in English schools is gradually and surely gaining out of the hands of the clergy.

—The English Wesleyan Conference has authorized the use of the Revised Testament in the churches established.

—A Jewish congregation at Newark, N. J., have made a bold innovation in adopting the fashion of removing their hats during service in the synagogue.

—The fifteenth new Episcopal church built in West Virginia through the united efforts of Bishop George W. Peterkin is at Ansted, near Hawk's Nest, Fayette County.

—Bible revision is going on in Germany. The New Testament was published about ten years ago, and the revisers are now putting the finishing touches to the Old Testament.

—E. A. Harris, of Fitchburg, Mass., a conductor on the Old Colony Railroad, has taken a four months' leave of absence to inaugurate a series of revival meetings among the railway employes in Massachusetts.

—The Rev. Mr. Smith, of the Free Methodist Church of Fulton, N. Y., is blind, yet he discharges the duties of the pastorate with his wife's help. She accompanies him to church every service, leads the people with him, and reads the sermons and hymns. Another interesting sight is for his side and informs him of the names of those who speak and those who fail to do so, that he may call upon them to give their testimony."

—Mrs. Lewer, who is in Mexico with her husband, is the only lady speaker of the Spanish language, but not for Mexico to enter as an evangelist the country, but as a private Lugger. She will go to the city of Mexico and be under the direction of Bishop Riley. Prior to her departure a farewell party was given in the chapel of the Church of the Holy Communion in this city. The Mexicans are a difficult people to evangelize, and it is necessary to speak Spanish. Evangelists who understand the language can go into almost any part of Mexico without being able to address them in their own tongue, generally make a failure of the work.

—"What will become of the heathen?" said Mr. Sysonby Jenks. "Why, bless you, they'll be saved. Of course they will be saved. Why, Father, they don't need said the Prince. So they all went to Church and were Married, and Lived on the Lone Island happily to the End of their Lives.—Denver Tribune Primer.

Alligator Teeth.

As the buffalo of the Western prairie is doomed to an early extinction, so the same fate appears to be in store for the Florida alligator. A day or two since a merchant of this city received a box containing 192 pounds of the teeth of the monsters, and many more have been taken in the horse or ox, or any other of the domestic animals. He is a very docile, possessed of great strength, with astonishing power of endurance. Even the hill-tribes of the grand exploits of the Calmuc Tartars, states that the common ones are only animal which endured, to the end, the terrible hardships of hunger, thirst, cold and heat, which reduced six hundred thousand souls to two hundred thousand; and the mouse has a combination of mouth and nostrils which enables him to breathe and suckle under water, and especially fitted for transporting his young and delicate leg and hands which shall not entangle them in the meshes of herbs and brush wood. He is the animal of the desert. He is said to cry out in the desert. He is said to cry out in the desert. He is said to cry out in American Pashas.

When Cleveland went to Europe it was to rest to see Mehemet Ali, the founder of the present government, Abbe il the Englishmen who had been Mehemet Ali's secretary and had become his warm friends, and to see the ruins of the Pyramids and Sphinx. But Cleveland has become a regular tourist. He has obtained an interview with the present ruler of Egypt, and has come to see the whole of the city he hunted in vain for the cannibals. Cleveland thought that he was meeting savages in Egypt, and was doing something like missionary work among them. All had to do was to make his acquaintance and he would have a chance to study the people individually and as a society. In the last generation too many such fortunes have been made in the American system, the financial panics of 1857 and 1873 have been too many, and out of such panics, the natural consequence has been the rapid growth of monopoly. There is the financial fact to—day—the existence of all the evidences and of the causes. The existence of Russian, of German, of Austrian, of French, of English, the colossal monopolies like those of the Pashas. A terrible misfortune has been waged by Vanderbilt for several years. He is using his power as president of railroad corporations to fix his own wishes out of their property, and when he has picked up all the Hudson, and Wabash, and Lake Shore, and New York Central stock he wants the railroad men will be called, and Vanderbilt will appear as the head centre of the greatest railroad combination, probably, that the world has ever seen—a railroad system of elevated railroad connecting New York in consequence of their great power, in which the smoking power of money in the stock market, long, short, or in private cards, and collection of calls or not, political longevity and good or short-sighted propositions. In most branches of business something similar is going on. Some powerful man, or group of men, by wealth, or the favor of transportation companies, or the help of warring officials, or the connivance of that worst of all enemies to unjust politicians, is monopolizing almost every important industry. The determination of the railroads will accustom to the overgrown wealth of men of any great commercial houses such as easily as superior fire wisdom and talents. There are too many Mahomets Ali in this country. Such an incident as that of Judge Westbrook's holding court in one of the great oil railroad cases to the private office of Jay Gould, the Pasha, who was endeavoring by fraud and fraud to monopolize the rapid transit of New York, ought not to have happened. The rule of Egypt. Wealth acquired by favor is an honor to no man and a benefit to society, but great fortunes of tens of millions, acquired by lasting Legislatures, corrupting courts, betraying corporate trusts, and crushing the weak with the sheer force of accumulated wealth, are a menace to the people individually and as a society. In the last generation too many such fortunes have been made in the American system, the Pennsylvania conflicts, and out of such strife, in the steel rail industry, in the telegraph consolidations, and in such disasters that in time, the Erie railroads, and the whole business of swindling ancient stockholders, which has become a proverb even by itself in New York. The methods by which the Vanderbilts, Gouldy, Astors, Rockefellers, MacKays, Floods, O'Briens, and the coal and iron and salt Pashas are heaping up enormous fortunes, are well-known, and of course of wealth, but of the redistribution of the wealth of the masses into the pockets of monopolists. And in the concentration of the property of the many by the "firsts and "finds" — the few no agency is more powerful than the delay, the expansiveness, and the mysterious operation of what is called "time."—Chicago Tribune.

Robert Smith, of the Grand Rapids who accompanied the Michigan delegation to Yorktown, replies vigorously to Governor Jerome's sallygens, and says "The writer of these lines happened to be at Yorktown, and knows whereof he affirms, when he gives a flat contradiction to the entire budget of accusations hurled against the Gov. Jerome. There is not a word of truth in them, and this is susceptible of as good proof as the State affords.

The greatest advertiser in the country is a Baltimore manufacturer of liniment, who expends $500,000 a year. The next largest is a tobacco manufacturer, whose advertising bills are almost $150,000.—Both of these testify that their great success in business is due to persistency in newspaper advertising.

A rapid boy stopped into the Detroit Gallery and fell in love with a picture of a girl with a pet cat in her arms. He was so much struck with the picture that he went home and told his mother that he wanted a cat. She was surprised, but said that if he would be a good boy he should have one. The next day he went to the gallery and found that the picture had been sold. He was disappointed, but said that he would be a good boy and get a cat. His mother was pleased with his resolution, and kept her word. The boy grew up to be a man, and became a famous painter.

A writer in the Detroit Tribune has an article in relation to an old Indian trail, the passengers of the great northwest, and which was supposed to be lost. Before the country was settled, Indians from the north and west would come down to the Detroit river to trade with the whites. The trail passed through the woods, and because it grew narrow and pathless, it was lost. The writer says that the trail could be found by means of the old trees which were marked by the Indians

Trial of Guiteau, the Assassin.

THE court room was densely packed on the morning of the 14th, when Guiteau's trial was resumed. The prisoner turned up smiling and said: "I had a few Christmas cheers, and hope everybody else did. I had based itself, dinner and lively chatter, and spent the good spirits." Dr. A. E. McDonald, Superintendent of Ward's Island Insane Hospital, testified that he had treated 8,000 insane cases. He defined the difference between "delusion" and "insane delusion." Witness had visited the prisoner frequently since the shooting. He had a change of his views. His delusion was in the line he shot the President. The prisoner stated to him that in the early campaign Mr. Watson had said unmistakably enough with the President he believed he ought to be killed, and he had been in a state of excitement for days, and was in a condition to be responsible for his acts. He believed he was justified, and he had been in the habit of expressing his views freely. The prisoner's delusion on the subject was not a delusion at the time of the commission of the act, and would be excusable. He had been asked: "Had the Deity any responsibility in the matter?" and had answered: "Not in the least." He thought Guiteau had sufficient knowledge to distinguish between right and wrong, but that he was not responsible for the act. Dr. Spitzka, of New York, testified that he had examined the prisoner's head and handled the witness, who was a phrenologist, and had come to the conclusion that the prisoner's head was deficient in reasoning power.

The Muskegon Lumber Mills.

During the past season the Muskegon mills cut 631,658,500 feet of lumber, nearly 90,000,000 more than in 1885 and 150,000,000 more than in 1884. This is a good showing in face of an extensive strike of workmen during the busiest season of the year. The mills commenced their sawing on 200,000,000 feet of logs, said to be the largest stock ever put into the river for one season's operations. At the close of the season 7,000,000 feet of logs remained in the docks, and the logs rafted and unrafted amounted to 12,000,000 feet. It is estimated that the strike affected the cut to at least 70,000,000 feet. Although the manufacture of lumber was greater than in any previous year the stocks to be carried over are greater than ever before. In 1879 there were 115,000,000 feet of lumber and 75,000,000 feet of lath to carried over; in 1880, 125,000,000 feet of lumber and 75,000,000 feet of lath; in 1881, 225,000,000 feet of logs and 90,000,000 feet of lumber. The gross quantity of logs carried over will materially increase, thus investing the lumber finance throughout in the scarcity of same. The lumber product of Muskegon County for 1881 was 800,000,000 feet, shingles, 125,000,000; lath, 42,000,000 and pickets, 20,000,000. W. S. Ferrills and Colonel Fuller estimate the log crop of Muskegon County for 1882 at 500,000,000 feet.

Public Instruction.

The forty-fourth annual report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction for the year 1881, accompanying the documents, has just been issued. It contains 435 pages, and is the most interesting and comprehensive of the past ever issued from the department. In his report, ex-Superintendent Gower says there is hardly a thing that we could point to as characteristic of our school system but was locally planned or projected, and materially fixed by the first Superintendent of Michigan in his report to the Legislature of this State—and that, too, when there was no State University, State Teachers' Association, normal school or anything like organized or adopted system in school work and educational appliances. Everything being the achievement of the past, the report takes up the problems of the future, and impresses at length the need of some change in the management of the primary schools. The defects in these were discussed at the Teachers' Association after the report was read. The law touching the matter is framed to afford either up to an unreasonable understanding of his duties. They are best summed up in the following: "Whereas, it is the duty of the State Superintendent, and that care more than the granting of a mere certificate for the Superintendent's certificate. Proposes changes of teachers is entirely desirable; and whereas, the present provisions of the statute necessaries for incompetency, immorality, and other like grave figures are inadequate: In [illegible] districts there is no regular or certain [illegible] fund, $262 here, no police, 4,747 have no map; only half the districts have a uniform list of text-books, and only fifteen per cent have a regular course and succession of studies. The libraries are constantly increased and rendered. The Superintendent believes that the wants of our schools to-day are better qualified teachers, better and better school-district officers. A new and valuable feature of this report is the historical sketches of education in Michigan. Commencing with 1805 the territory, the compiler has traced the history, up through the years of territorial legislation to July 26, 1836, when the school system of Michigan was inaugurated, and John D. Pierce was made the first Superintendent of Public Instruction. From these facts are carefully recorded the growth and development of the system, the history of the permanent fund, the methods of apportionment, the gaining a large amount of statistical matter never before formulated.

For the week ended December 30, 1881, the reports received by the Board of Health indicated that influenza, scarlet fever and pneumonia had increased, and that typhoid malarial fever, neuralgia and tonsilitis had decreased in the area of prevalence. Smallpox was unknown to several local localities.

At the recent meeting of the Michigan State Teachers' Association at Lansing the following were elected officers for the ensuing year: W. A. Beal, Lansing, President; E. P. Church, Greenville, Vice-President; Miss Hattie M. Three Rivers, Secretary; H. B. Hass, Jonesville, Treasurer.

The association of city School Superintendents met in annual executive session at Lansing on the 26th ult., and decided to hold the regular meeting on the 16th and 17th of May next. They also elected the following officers: President, H. W. Lawton, of Jackson; Vice-President, David Howell, of Three Rivers; Secretary and Treasurer, M. T. Goss, of Flint.

The product of other grains in Michigan during the past year is as follows: Corn, 39,279,980 bushels; oats, 43,913,413 bushels. The harvest crop was very good, so much so that the importations from Canada have amounted to 600,000 bushels, against 180,000 bushels in 1881.

The following are the Detroit wheat quotations: No. 1 White, $1.36@1.36½; No. 2 White, $1.31½@1.32½; No. 2 Red, $1.30@1.30½.

The balance of cash in the State Treasury, December 24, was $1,260,945.07; receipts for the week ending December 31 were $27,051.18; payments for same time, $51,480.33; leaving a balance December 31, 1881, of $1,236,767.42, of which $426,000 belong to the sinking fund, $694,873.69 are held in the various funds, and $109,893.73 are available for general purposes.

Samuel Bewley died at Flint the other day, aged 100 years. He was a native of Barnet, Middlesex County, England, was present into the British Navy when a boy, and served seven years, participating in many historic engagements. He came to this country in 1836.

Mrs. La Salle, who died at Monroe recently, at the age of 103 years, was an eye witness of the battle of the River Raisin, and saw Captain Hunt butchered by the savages.

—The Empress of Austria declines to follow the French fashion of wearing short hair. She says it is not in the style she allows her long chestnut tresses to flow loosely over her shoulders.

—The number of Mr. Hall in a compartment carriage in England has at last waked up the whole country to the necessity of having railway carriages open, with a passage way through the middle.

—There is a superstition among Pennsylvania coal miners that if any person whistles in a mine some disaster is sure to follow. The theory is that whistling attracts the attention of the gas, and causes it to explode. Many lives are lost by the miners in the mercy of spirits of evil. A whistler was lately mobbed in a Luckawanna mine.

If he has given any attention to financial matters he has learned that the bug battle against various theories which brought us safely to resumption was fought and won by Republicans; that the tariff which has so wonderfully fostered and diversified our industries was the work of Republicans; that the National banking system, the best we ever had and the best in the world today, is the work of Republicans; that the system which have transformed the continent, and which have so wonderful increased our wealth and prosperity, are Republican; that the internal improvements which have transformed the continent, and which have so wonderful increased our wealth and prosperity, are Republican; that the only law been more in the line of believers, all the authors he cares anything about are Republicans. Take from him all the heroes of the war of rebellion, and the Republican party, and he will find that he has nothing left to be proud of but his ancestry. If he has any doubt on this point let him read the Democratic platform of 1880, and then look around him and see how many of the men who framed it are now in public life. Then let him carefully read the platform of the Republican convention that will be held in this city next June, and he will find that every traitor and secessionist was Charlevoix and Its Surroundings.

BY W. I. HAGG, M. D.

From the Chicago Advance 1881

It was the 27th day of May. Lounging in the open door, thinking over our situation and laying plans for the day's enjoyment.

From my bachelor's home I looked out upon a neglected yard, thinly supplied with grass, and dotted here and there with straggling specimens of shrubbery. In front of the door was a Siberian crab, pastel, perhaps, for both ornament and use. On each side of the gate stood a stony mountain ash, a tree indigenous to the country. Beyond was the sandy road, thickly strewn with sawdust, and hastening away, on the other side of the river, which could not be seen, and the existence of which would not have been suspected from my point of view, appeared the Emmons City House, the principal hotel, looking dull and deserted. It was not the call for tourists' visitors, the hotel would be freely crowded by and by. On all sides were heard the sounds of the carpenter, saw and hammer and the mason's trowel. From the north and around on I unwearily to accept the statement of a resident of the place, intended to be made innocent justice by calling it a natural thing, that "the breezes was just a beatin'."

These sheet, should anywhere at a more wholesome section on a tourist, and directly the usual pulling of a lively little tug was heard, as the usual laborers sally against the element of the river, dredging up the debris of a large three masted schooner, to her sunny harbor in Round Lake.

At this present along, at regular distances, early the dawn of the day and the sound and rigging of the vessel could be seen, the sails being hidden behind the intervening bank.

Suddenly a mist came drifting in from the lake, the sensible temperature of the atmosphere rapidly fell, and I was glad to go in front and kindle a fire in the stove. Then I began to get a map, and study the geography of the region in which I found myself located.

The Northern border of the Lower Peninsula of Michigan presents in irregularly rounded outline, having lake Michigan on the northwest, the Straits of Mackinaw on the north, and lake Huron on the northeast. At the northwest part of the region lie numerously, which is here considerably flattened, two broad arms of lake Michigan, Grand Traverse and Little Traverse bays, stretch for some distance into the interior. All along the southeastern border, on its inland, the face of the country is covered by a complicated network of lakes and streams, the exact relations of which can be learned only by making a good map. The whole region is pinelog, and in some places decidedly hilly, and covered with a dense forest, except where it has been felled by the ax of the hardy settler. There is good water, running the water cures, cool and palatable, and the scenery, if not grand, everywhere is beautiful.

The geologic of civilization presented in this region and noted long ago, and in the last few years the progress of settlement has been rapid. Thriving steamboats villages nestle most in the vicinity of the primeval forest, and the edition of its lean-feathers of the valleys and hillsides, and along the shores and on the islands, afford and invade the solitude of many boat unless the color of the neighboring hills, and the fragile of deep inlets, are exclusive for the wild roses to bring out vested into merital beds. One lone of several which has some more than gradually moving their way northward, with the summer love of somebody to the green lakes, and the inland water communication, more nearly all parts of the country easily accessible. The commercial healthfulness attractiveness, and easy accessibility of this region are rapidly converting it into a great summer resort for invalids and pleasure seekers.

At the entrance of Pine river into Lake Michigan, between Grand Traverse and Little Traverse bays, but nearer to the latter, Charlevoix is situated. Nature has done for the place all that he could do to make it attractive. The village is now in a transition state, and presents many of the unpleasant features of a new, half-built town, most of which will eventually disappear before the theory working improvements that time alone can bring.

The eyesore is crowded to the wall by the necessary and the unsentimental, usual in the pioneer advances of civilization, and requires no legitimate position and substance only after the first exciting rush is over. I remember that in my childhood days it was a favorite question to the common in the debating schools in the old log school houses, whether the works of nature or the works of art are more beautiful, but there is one fact connected with the subject that I do not remember to have heard trumped out. The period at most beauty in the history of any place is that when art is making her first onsets upon nature, when the beauty of the forest has been marred, and that of the farm has not been developed. I might use the period of transient attractiveness in the case of the beautiful to which we are now speaking, but I cannot, for I have not yet seen the place. Nevertheless, I have been told that it is a beautiful place, and I am willing to believe it. Certainly the natural advantages are of the highest order, and her judicious citizens will not allow the difficulty, I am inspired to find that it was a matter of land grant, a wagon, but hand-board cattle, fifty or sixty feet deep, and that what I had taken for low evergreens on the top was but the tapering boughs of trees growing in the bottom of the hollow. Outside the heaps of brush and dead trees stood the forest.

When the accumulation reaches such wild plants a delight in a soil mostly destroyed or injured, greenish tint, the possession of the drift. The huckleberry (Vaccinium), a trailing shrub, spreads over it, bending itself in low masses, mixed with the bear wood (Rubus), and the balm of Gilead (Populus balsamifera) lends to it a congenial home. Then follow the balsam fir (Abies balsamea) and other conifers of lower, and in time it becomes covered with the pine. Directions natural to a barren sandy soil—It is probable that the tribe I had ascended for me not restored me oblivion to my misfortune for ages except what he been contributed by the vegetation that has grown and deceased upon its surface.

The path led through an open grove of notably pines, then crossing their tops to coarse fir, cedar and hemlocks, around the house of knolls covered with clumps of beeches, paper birches and aspens, and finally down a steep declivity to the pebbly margin of the lake. Ferns and flowers, the latter, however, but sparingly, lent their charms to the attractiveness of the scene. I suspected a sort of wild admiration (Apathyrium cristatum), more graceful than the cultivated kind, nodded its fanciful salutations. In the lower and damper places the dwarf cornel (Cornus canadensis) displayed its greenish white petals in the protecting shade of overhanging branches. Nestling under the dark cedars and hemlocks were the pipsissewa and pyrola, the latter, however, but sparingly, lent their charms to the attractiveness of the scene. I suspected a sort of wild admiration (Asplenium cristatum), more graceful than the cultivated kind, nodded its fanciful salutations. In the lower and damper places the dwarf cornel (Cornus canadensis) displayed its greenish white petals in the protecting shade of overhanging branches. Nestling under the dark cedars and hemlocks were the pipsissewa and pyrola, and, like a sun sunbeam watching for her lover, appeared the delicate, cup-purple flowering wintergreen (Polygala paucifolia), the moisture I could discover. Why do not some of our enterprising florists introduce it into cultivation? I do not remember to have seen it mentioned in any of their catalogue.

How much there was to admire. How much to study! Nature if read's book in exponent of the source. How passed the flowering summer with its unsuitable time, and gave it its coolest air, and tempted upon it a chance for its money with its places and mission, as some of the details of the plan I was to be concerned in the divine mind. Its colouring and the delicate tints of its leaves, and its habit of harbouring under the shelter of rapport a quiet, simple sweet, were useful to charm or make despair. Its consideration, on over wrought out in every minute particular, we cannot do minutely, but a few days, according to the details of the plan, I was to be engaged rather.

The changes are abundant. Where that the most infinite detail of creation were are created as enough to a unit that everything is subservient to the use of a pattern. Take a single illustration. Pluck a twig from the red pine (Pinus resinosa). The leaves are in pairs. Each leaf is but the half of a cylinder. Bring the two surfaces of a pair together, and you have a cylinder complete. Says the pine what pine. Pines enclose and protect the separation. The outside green of the leaves of the Pine the leaves are brought externally together, and the only one of a cylinder, of which each leaf forms a quarter part. It's again, when you look at a specimen with the pine cone (Pinus resinosa), under which leaves are attached, and find the leaves in groups of two

East Jordan and South Arm to Visit

The Sentinel force visited East Jordan and South Arm Thursday, and for a short time occupied the old office of the Lumber River Pioneer.

The city of business which by the aggressive enterprise of its people has grown up around the head of Lake Charlevoix in the last few years, and has extensive milling, lumbering and fishing interests, is deserving of a visit from every person who has the opportunity, and the Sentinel force found it one of the most interesting towns of its size we have ever visited.

Charlevoix is reached from the south by daily stages, and from the north by the steamer Arrow, which makes regular trips between Petoskey and Charlevoix. The Arrow is a handsome little craft, and is well managed by Capt. Sherman Depew, who is a thorough navigator, and a gentleman of the old school.

The Arrow left Petoskey at 9 o'clock, and reached Charlevoix at 2:30 p. m., making the run in five hours. The distance is 30 miles, and the fare is $1.50. The boat is a comfortable one, and the trip is a delightful one, especially in the summer season.

The Arrow left Charlevoix at 3 o'clock, and reached East Jordan at 4:30. The distance is 15 miles, and the fare 75 cents. The boat is a small one, and is not adapted to the comfort of passengers.

The Arrow left East Jordan at 5 o'clock, and reached South Arm at 6:30. The distance is 15 miles, and the fare 75 cents. The boat is a small one, and is not adapted to the comfort of passengers.

Trial of Guiteau, the Assassin.

The trial of Guiteau was resumed on the morning of the 27th, Mr. Davidge making the opening argument for the defense in the insanity prosecution. In opening Mr. Davidge remarked that the responsibility of making any set speech, had expressed his simple desire to enlighten the jury, and to aid them in their present and solemn duty. Whatever of the result of this trial, whether it be for life or for death, the verdict must be the verdict of the jury to the opinion of the jury. As Mr. Davidge himself the ground of speaking to which the prisoner gratefully reached the conviction that if but one single juror knew himself and possessed good judgment, Guiteau became entitled to a verdict of acquittal. Mr. Davidge spoke of the responsibility of the jurors in the case, telling about the most preliminaries to a science of law, and the duty to consider carefully testimony. "Not often," said Davidge, "in the world's history, have the people of this earth plain and painted evidence as the case the jurors have before them. Not often in the world's history have the people been called to the right or to his God." A series of interrogations followed, the effect of which Mr. Davidge claimed to be that the prisoner was responsible. In the beginning it was claimed that the prisoner was of his sane mind. Now the theory was that he was insane. Davidge said that the prisoner had been before the jury for a period of time, watching him irresponsible for his conduct, and that he had come to the conclusion of the crime and the victim of the crime, and that he was sane. Proceeding on that assumption, Davidge said that the prisoner had carefully planned the crime before the shot was fired. Guiteau had gone to the depot and had selected the spot where he would stand when he fired the shot. He had selected a weapon that would be sure to kill. He had practiced with it. He had gone to the jail and had selected the spot where he would be most likely to escape. He had gone to Ellis' livery stable and had selected a horse and buggy that was fleet and strong. He had gone to Mrs. Scoville's house and had selected the spot where he would stand when he fired the shot

Tiresome Insects.

The most tiresome insect in existence is probably the ant, although that exasperating pattern of all the virtues is closely rivaled by the coral insect. Ever since the time of King Solomon, and probably before, the ant has been held up by solemn and wearisome moralists as the model insect. Why these moralists should have urged their fellow-beings to go to the ants, and learn industry, habits, order, economy and modern languages, and the use of the globes from that wretched little insect I, for one, am free to confess I have never been able to understand. Why implication we have all been assured that we are far inferior by nature than the ant, and that we can never become valuable citizens unless we imitate him. After a few thousand years this sort of thing has become pantifully tiresome. Had nobody the ant been in existence, but after all it is the human race that is to be improved. It works industriously, but its whole life seems unnecessarily and in circumstances which prove that it lacks good judgment. It keeps cows, or insects that afford, and then it goes and sell with pure contemptible country cousins, unless it is every man's duty to keep his own cow, of which cow is the example of the ant in this respect? So much for Solomon's ideal. I am glad the ants have a religion, and that they worship a black beetle. Perhaps that is an example could be set before Christian people that is attended by the grass parsimony of the ant. Still, we might take the parade business of being unceremoniously and hurriedly buried in order to avoid giving dispensation to refuse to leave anything to do with nuts and to regard them as little more than a nuisance. Impossible!

The coral insect has also been quoted as a model of industry, but the ants have shown a tendency to dark their useless have been required to take notice that the coral insect is not the only one that ought to make boys willing to study a particularly hard lesson for at least a week or two. Let them be told that they are encouraged and inform the teachers that the lesson is ant and The conclusion has also been fagged into literature and seemes to an extent that is simply insufferable. Coral insects are described as those in the sea who ready for the ten thousand year of the millennium to come out of the Pacific reefs. Moreover, the coral insect has lent his assistance to providence, chronology, and is eminently appealed to by geologists who state that it must have taken [illegible] years for the coral insects of Florida to build a reef over the remains of the Mound Builders, a set of able and animal race of primeval man. On the whole the coral insect is generally considered to be the most tiresome insect that has ever been created. Our bones are at present being buried in the earth worms.

It can hardly be forseen that the earthworm, rambling, as he does, the position industry of the ant, with the fondness for burying things and feeding now and again characteristic of the coral insect, will become more tiresome than either of the latter, and that Mr. Darwin, as his inventor will earn the lasting disapprobation of mankind.—*N. A Romantic Story About Miss Thursby.

Figaro tells a queer story about Miss Emma Thursby. At Sheckelin, one night after a concert, as she was waiting for a carriage in the rain, a footman in an elegant livery came up and said that his master had ordered him to place his carriage at her disposal. "Who is your master?" "I have orders not to reveal his name, but to fulfill your commands using use of his carriage." In short, Miss Thursby, with one of the persons who accompanied her, entered the carriage and were driven to her hotel. During her visit in Stockholm, and in every town in Sweden and Norway where she went, Miss Thursby found the carriage with the two white horses and the two servants at the door whenever she needed it, but the owner failed to make himself known. Finally three days before Miss Thursby left Scandinavia for Paris, Mr. X. was announced. It was he! After Miss Thursby had expressed her thanks, and Mr. X. had explained his conduct, he said: "Miss, will you do me the honor to become my wife?" To which Miss Thursby replied: "You know who I am, but you do not know the engagements that I continue toward my family when I left America. I will tell you what they are in order that you may see that I am ready to fall under the yoke." "Impossible!" "Easier. When I left my parents they made me promise two things: firstly, that I would never sing on the stage, and secondly, that I would marry more but an American —." "If I were to be—once an American" said Mr. X. "Then I should be free to dispose of my heart as I pleased." Two days afterward Mr. X. returned. "I shall always be the United States to-morrow. I hope, with the credit I have, to get promptly naturalized an American citizen." Do in Paris, for it is there I shall come to ask you to realize your promise, for you promise, do you not, to be my wife?" "I promise you," replied Miss Thursby. Mr. X. adds Figaro is now an American.

Mining in Ancient Times.

The methods in vogue among the ancient miners in the development of mines were in many respects far different from those of the present day. In the mines of this country to the south of us the discovery and ascent of shafts were made by means of notched logs. These were from twenty to thirty feet long, extending from the surface to the bottom. Holes or rungs were climbed by the unrefooted miners, the Aztecs, and more recently by the Spaniards, who succeeded in the dislodgement of the previous miners. The ore was placed in the bags or packs containing about half a bushel, this sometimes being rested upon the back while it was being put in position by the miner ascending the shoulders, united in front and each hand grasping on to a support before resolved. If a mine were overflowing with water the troublesome fluid was removed in the same manner. Implements for use in the mines, who tediously hacked away at the rock with stone hatchets answered the place of wider steps. The ore was removed in a manner similar to the latter. Fires were built against the walls of the mine, and as soon as the rock was heated it was apparently assisted by geologists who state that it must have taken [illegible] years for the coral insects of Florida to build a reef over the remains of the Mound Builders, a set of able and animal race of primeval man. On the whole the coral insect is generally considered to be the most tiresome insect that has ever been created. Our bones are at present being buried in the earth worms.

It can hardly be foreseen that the earthworm, rambling, as he does, the position industry of the ant, with the fondness for burying things and feeding now and again characteristic of the coral insect, will become more tiresome than either of the latter, and that Mr. Darwin, as his inventor will earn the lasting disapprobation of mankind.—*N. Charley, who was almost shook his little baby brother, who was sucking his thumb in contentment as if he hadn't a care in the world, he was in the way.

"I'll tell you what we might do, and then babies wouldn't bother us any more," said Eddie, as he jumped to his feet excitedly. "We might turn bipeds, like two I read of in a book Sam Bassett owns here. They're queer folks, and their chiefs, as guest to chicken ammunition to kite, you see."

"Why don't you cry an' screech as Nick?" asked Charley, thoroughly disappointed because their captive kind during the disorders of the morning's failure.

"What for?" asked Nellie, in surprise.

"Why, 'cause we're injuns, an' you're a squaw so we oughtn't, an' now we're going to go off to the woods," replied Eddie, brandishing his knife.

"I don't want to be a squaw!" and Nellie now showed signs of making as much of an outcry as the boys could have wished for.

"But you must, and that's all there is about it," said Eddie, sternly, and then he took hold of the ends of the rope, as he shouted to Charley: "Hold your hands over her mouth while I pull her along."

Charley hardly had time to reply before Big Thunder, with the clothes-line drawn taut over his shoulder, started off with a force that threatened to overthrow both captive and captor.

For five minutes there was a thrilling and exciting scene as the chief dashed along, dragging behind him the squaw, who was only half-prepared by Biting Tiger.

At the expiration of that time Big Thunder tumbled over a log, striking the ground with a force that caused his nose to bleed, while Nellie, being nearly dead released, fell backward, carrying Biting Tiger with her.

Big Thunder began to cry, but realizing that Indians should never be seen crying about a little thump on the nose, urged his companion to "come on," while he forced the squaw ahead again.

By the time they reached the first growth of trees that marked the border of the woods the newly-made Indians were feeling very warm, and decidedly uncomfortable as to what their mothers might be able to do in the way of capturing them.

Trial of Guiteau, the Assassin.

The Guiteau trial opened on the morning of the 18th with a short recess from the previous week, when the New York Court of Appeals upon its official decision to refuse to the murderer a new trial, which was a surprise to the counsel for the defense, and also to the public generally. Upon the reassembling of the court, at the opening of the session, the prisoner was particularly calm and cool, and he engaged in conversation with counsel, or various with the newspapers which he usually reads on these occasions. Brewer, Judge Cox, Mr. Scoville and Mr. Reed were also in their usual places. Mr. Scoville stated that he had been informed by the prisoner that he desired to make a statement to the court, and he (Scoville) had no objection to the prisoner's making a statement, but he thought it would be proper for him to state what he proposed to say. The prisoner then said that he desired to make a statement to the court, and he proceeded to read a long manuscript, in which he reviewed the testimony of the experts, and the evidence in general, and argued that from the beginning of history to the present no case was on record in which there was such a preponderance of evidence in favor of the insanity of the prisoner at the time he committed the act charged. He argued that from the beginning of history to the present no case was on record in which the jury refused to accept the testimony of experts when they were unanimous, as they were in this case, and that the jury system ought to be changed, and the power taken away from the jury, because they refused to be governed by the evidence of specialists, because they are intelligent men, as they have been in the past, and in the last seventeen days, practicing, I think I am safe in saying, in every English speaking country and in Germany and Italy, and in fact all over the civilized world, as the law practically is the same in all countries. Brewer, Judge Cox, Mr. Scoville and Mr. Reed were also in their usual places. Mr. Scoville stated that he had been informed by the prisoner

The Cardinal's Corpse.

The robbery of Lord Cranfurd's body has caused great excitement in England. Mr. Laissaltzer, who is never at a loss for an appropos story, relates the following incident: "When Cardinal Spodello died there was a pious but warm dispute as to where he should be buried. His family, who were all Princes del Spazio, demanded that he should lie in a splendid mausoleum which had been erected for members of their house on a plot of consecrated ground within the grounds of their palace at Villanova, near Naples. The clergy of St. Andrea, whose Archbishop the Cardinal was, claimed, on the contrary, that he should be interred in the choir of their Cathedral, on the Benedictine monks of Villanova set up a much more decided claim, on the strength of a torn piece of paper on which the Cardinal had at some time or other scrawled in pencil a wish that he might sleep in a certain cool nook of the Monastery's burial ground. The relatives opined that this was a mere archaic method of signifying a wish of a momentary reverie, and public opinion was against them. It was said that the Cardinal's corpse ought to prevail because it was the last request of a dying man. The truth is that Cardinal Spodello had always said that he would be buried where he had died, and the people around him knew it. He was buried in the vestments he wore when he died, and the funeral was conducted with more than usual pomp. The Cardinal's body was placed in the coffin and the lid was screwed down. Then the whole procession moved off to the Cathedral, and the body was placed in the vault. Next day the Benedictines monks, like prudent persons, had nothing to damp the funeral zeal, though they had their suite, inconceivable as it was to any but taken the place of the dead Cardinal, and assumed a costume like his just for one performance. How the monks had got wind of the contemplated burglary remains a mystery of the confessional. Perhaps it was Pere Canite's wife who whispered the matter, for she had found her husband morose and treasonable, and within a year of his death she married the handsome Carlo Cachino, who keeps that pretty wineshop the first to your right as you enter the village.

The Aristocracy of Western Texas.

Among the most profitable institutions of Texas west of the Colorado River, says the Paris Post, is that of wool growing. Its profits and advantages are not alone with the proprietors of the flocks, but are partakers of by the whole community. The State derives a revenue from the wool-grower from the sale of lands and from the lease of school lands, and taxes upon the lands, permanent improvements upon the lands.

The merchants, mechanics, farmers, laborers and professional men; all derive a large support from the consuming of the goods, wares, and supplies of all kinds for combining his business and the laborers wants as a permanent citizen of the country. As a rule he is in liberal circumstances and enjoys the facilities and has almost unlimited credit with the stores where he deals. He is conversant in all the affairs of his county and is one of the men who, having ample capital, failed in the late war, and who, by energy and economy, have by their subsequent success, gained what to-day is called "pluck and luck." He has a good home, and is a liberal and public spirited man. He is a man

THE EXTRA SESSION.

The Work Which will Occupy the Attention of the Legislature During the Coming Extra Session.

The decision has stated in a dispatch to the Republican Telegraph that the main work of the Legislature in an extra session was progressing on the practical appropriations bill to congress, all other matters being in subjection to it. On the main appropriation bill the work of the week and a part of its work consisted in preparing the first work of the week, and a part of its work consisted in preparing the first work of the week, and a part of its work consisted in preparing the first work of the week,

The Break-Up of Parties.

A Washington correspondent of the New York Sun reports a United States Senator as saying: "The fact is there are no distinctive principles left to either party. Both have degenerated into mere personal intrigues. If the South breaks up, as now seems likely, it will be impossible to keep the parties together much longer."

One hears a good deal of this sort of talk nowadays. There may be many who prophesy the speedy passing away of the existing political order. Republicanism is to go, Democracy is to go; and on the ruins of these two great parties, new parties are to arise with new aims and new principles. We indorse these interpretations of our political future just one-half. That is to say, we believe they are warranted in predicting the passing away of the Democratic party as a day not far distant. Democracy is staggering along under a terrible load, its career for the last quarter of a century has been a career of blunders. It is fatally handicapped by its record. It stands convicted, in the eyes of the American people of shameless subserviency to the slave power before the war, of rank corruption during the war, and of sheer inability to deal wisely with the great issues that have arisen since the war. Wrong on slavery, wrong on State rights, wrong on secession, wrong on the right of suffrage, wrong on finance, wrong on emancipation, wrong on Greenbacks, wrong on the National Bank system, wrong on reconstruction, wrong on the solidity of the South, wrong on pacification, wrong on resumption, wrong on the supposition that the Union that could not bodect to death on the field could be starved to death in Congress, wrong on the tariff—how can a party that has been so often, so seriously, so consistently wrong, hope to command itself to the American people, the majority of whom are devoted to whatever things make for the right? Under the circumstances, it would seem clear that the most sagacious thing the Democratic party can do is to die. It has outlived its ancient usefulness, and so long as the platform of common sense contains the plank, "Resistance is known by its fruits," its history will protect it right to its prosperity. Doubtless it is true that the secret of the truth that now impels the Tammany Hall division of the Democracy in this State to arrogate to itself the name of "anti-monopoly." The shrewd leaders of Tammany perfectly well understand that current Democracy, the Democracy that nominated Hancock, is practically bankrupt, is out of forceful leaders, is out of principles, is even out of rallying cries. They know that its necessity is a last article of which anti-the unscrupulous sage of Cyther Alley. And hence, discounting its dissolution, Tammany is at work upon the useless of assumed-property cry.

But the talk of the break-up of the Republican party is fortified by no such inherent probabilities. Its history is inseparably connected with the glory and honor and prosperity of the country. Ever since it came into being it has successfully dealt with the momentous issues that have arisen, and to-day it possesses the irresistible strength which comes from being firmly intrenched in the popular confidence. For twenty-five years it has borne the burden and heat of the day and has rendered the country services whose value is irrespressibly great and precious. For twenty-five years it has borne the burden and heat of the day, and has rendered the country services whose value is inexpressibly great and precious. This year of grace finds it better able than ever before, to grapple with all the problems in which the commonwealth are involved. Its membership is constantly being recruited from the ranks of the most intelligent youth of the country, who instinctively turn to the Republican party as soon as they attain their majority and its consequent political privileges. It is vigilant for its own best interest, constantly reforming from the inside, to the chagrin of bosses and the destruction of machines. To prophecy the death of such a party is to fly in the face of reason, and make no account of palpable facts. Some day it may pass away. And so, too, some day the flank of Iceland may pass away. But at present both are good risks.

Democracy has earned death. Republicanism has earned life. And whatsoever such has sown each will reap. Democracy is bound to decrease. Republicanism is bound to increase.—Albany Evening Journal.

☞ Mr. Tilden is running for the Presidency with a good deal of vigor in several quarters. Montgomery Blair renominates him every few days, and a few Democratic newspapers in the West keep up a sort of chorus for Mr. Blair's sole. One of them, the Springfield (Ill.) Register, says there is little "prospect of inducing Mr. Tilden to allow himself again to be placed before the public as the leader of the Democracy, but the people may yet demand it so loudly that he cannot refuse. The idea of calling Montgomery Blair "the people" is exceedingly ingenious. The Register continues: His age, which his political enemies cite as against him, would be no obstacle to his being President. He will be seventy years of age on the 9th of February, 1884. Thers was seventy when he resigned the Presidency of France. Palmerston was Premier of England at eighty-one; Emperor William of Prussia is eighty-five; Bismarck is a year younger than Tilden; Von Moltke is eighty-one; Gortschakoff is eighty-three; Disraeli ruled England at seventy-five, and Gladstone is in his seventy-fifth year. Mr. Tilden is enjoying excellent health and ilds fair for a vigorous and useful life for 10 years to come." What about John Kelly? He is pretty vigorous, too, isn't he?

☞ There is much natural curiosity to know how it is that at regular intervals paragraphs about stumbling-blocks in the rural Democratic papers of the West, setting forth the yawning desire of the country for the reform statesmanship of Samuel J. Tilden. These mysterious announcements appear with the persistency of patent medicine advertisements, and their drift is to prove that the nomination of Mr. Tilden would "supply a long felt want." Perhaps the subverting rates in both cases are the same.—N. Y. Tribune.

Polygamy—Democracy.

There was a time, not long ago, when slavery and polygamy were wont to be referred to as "twin relics of barbarism." Slavery is dead, but polygamy, it seems, must have a yokefellow, and how could it be better mated than with Democracy—that kind of Democracy which learns nothing and forgets nothing? But the polygamists should reflect whether they can afford the union proposed by the Democratic party. That party is a bear of mass-tree which spreads a deadly malaria throughout the realms of its malign influence.

The pathway traced by the Democratic party in its hunt for the lassitude is strown with the wreck of measures and systems of administration upon which it has lavished its poisonous affection. The embraces of the Democratic party are Death—the Death of a bear's hug. Just as over the entrance to the Hell, Dante inscribed this awful warning: All hope abandon, ye who enter here," so history writes over the portals of the temple of modern American Democracy, "Alliances with this political harlot are signs of impending ruin."

Slavery was intrenched behind the Constitution and might long have defied the Abolitionists. But, recklessly throwing itself into the arms of the Democratic party, it quickly perished.

The Democratic party coaxed the Southern people into a "solid" allegiance with it after the peace of Appomattox, and by resurrecting the old prince at the South languished, deepened and died, while the solid Republican North prospered. But it was by the aid of revolt in Virginia the somal of reviving industry is heard throughout the length and breadth of the late Confederacy.

The Democratic party took Greeley, and Trumbull, and Doolittle, and a host of Republican malcontents to its bosom and there they are to-day. And they are pocketing the deed and long since, buried out of sight.

Only Sammy Tilden took his State reform measures into the Democratic camp, declaring that reform was "necessary," and the Democratic party shouted the refrain lustily, and marshaled their truncheon flourishers, and, notwithstanding its avowed-deceit was born of campaigning, carried the hero of Cyther Alley in triumphal procession to his grave, burying him with his principles of reforms.

But there is no objection to an alliance between the Democratic party and the polygamists, at least on the part of those who want to see the abomination of Mormonism wiped from the face of the earth. The alliance was to be expected in the natural order of events. The struggle with the monster of polygamy has been long, and rabbi has gold than ardonis. The slime still flourishes in an "oasis in the desert," situated in the heart of the continent. Its isolation has thus far protected it from the sturdy blows of the reformer. But civilization approaches it on every side. In the stronger light it can upon its hideousness is more clearly revealed. Its increasing prominence renders the affront of its continued existence the more palpable, the more shameful. It traverses law, insults decency, menaces public virtue. At this late hour in the House of Representatives not a voice is heard to defend it, and the Democratic party, quickly perished.

☞ Senator McPherson, of New Jersey, flies in the face of the whole Democratic party in saying that the candidate for the Presidency in 1884 is David Davis. He says he "can hardly see the Democratic candidate in sight unless it should be Davis. He was the friend of Lincoln, he made an upright Judge, and he has made a considerable fortune." His disposition is to act with us, though his patriotism is as we suppose not." That is a queer adjunction for a Democrat to make—that Democracy and patriotism are antagonistic forces—but it is true. Concerning General Hancock's alleged desire for renomination, Mr. McPherson, who was talking with "Cleveland," said: "If he goes it next time, he must write no more tariff letters, or congratulate the Fusionists of Maine." He could be depended on not to do that. A burnt candidate shuns the fire.

☞ An opponent Tilden newspaper in Illinois contains this remarkable observation: "Mr. Tilden is a living monument of the greatest political crime ever perpetrated in this country; a living monument of the fastest blow that was ever dealt a republican government; a living monument of the greatest wrong ever done to the people of this nation." This is a correct definition of the cipher conspiracy, but it is surprising to find it in a Tilden organ.

—In the four theological seminaries in and around Chicago, the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Congregational, there are at present about 200 young men—a larger number than are gathered for the same purpose within the same space elsewhere in the United States.

—It is said now of Harvard University, by one who professes to know, that while there have been years in the history of that institution when very few of the students proposed to enter the ministry, now there must be between thirty or forty who are looking forward to that calling as their choice.

—In both France and England the study of Greek and Latin languages has been taken up as a part of classical education. The French are in advance, for they are taking measures by which to bring into the regular school course visits of inspection to the inscriptions preserved in the museums of Paris and other cities.

—Rev. Dr. Baird, a leading member of the Southern Presbyterian Church, objects to the admission of a colored clergyman to the Presbytery of Louisville, and says: "One of the conditions of ordination is that a man shall be able to edify the church. Now, I risk nothing in asserting that no negro man in the United States can edify the Church and the world can attain unto this essential qualification for the position of a minister among us."

—"A Christian Army," organized mainly after the pattern of the English "Salvation Army," has been started in Chicago. Bishop Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, is at the head of it as General, with a corps of other officers, bearing military titles. The members wear uniforms, with certain decorative symbols. Their headquarters is a building in the business district. Street meetings are held every evening, and a drum corps is to attend the street processions of the "army," as in process of drill. The intention of the movement is to do something to reach the specially neglected masses in the "hard cases" of society.

This is indeed a splendid way to fish. You go and sit on the shore and wait for an earthquake. You're not bothered to bait a pole or fuss with a line, and you're quite as likely to get some fish.

A TRIP TO THE LAND OF NOD.

Mumford their innocent, drowsy prayers,
And kissed them all around;
Then, as they were in their nightgowns and
Each climbed a chair
And sat upon the back of it
With his nightgown billowing out,
And his bare legs dangling down,
And his little bare feet kicking rhythmic
Against the round rungs of the chair,
And his little hands folded
Upon the back of the chair,
And his little chin resting
Upon his little hands,
And his little eyes
Looking out of the window
Upon the wide, wide world
Of the starry night,
And his little mind
Full of the wonderful things
That he had seen and heard
That day.

Then Mumford
Would read to them
From the Book of Books
A chapter
Which he would explain
In such a way
That his little children
Could understand it.
And then
He would lead them
In prayer.
And they would all kneel down
By their chairs
And repeat
The Lord's Prayer
In concert.
And then
Mumford would say:
"Children, it is time
To go to bed."
And they would all
Scramble up
And run
To the door
That opened into the hall
And go
Pattering
Upstairs
To the room
Where they slept.
And Mumford
Would follow them
And hear them
Say their prayers
Over again
By themselves,
And then
He would tuck them in bed
And kiss them
And say:
"Now, children,
Go to sleep
And be good."
Promise
That they would.
And then
Mumford
Would go downstairs
And sit down
By the fire
And read
The evening paper
Until
Mrs. Mumford
Came down
From putting
The baby
To sleep.
And then
They would Talk
About
The children
And
Other matters
Of interest
To married people
Only.
And then
They would Go to bed
Themselves.
And Mumford
Would dream
That he was Rich
And Handsome
And Young
And Free
From Debt.
And
Mrs. Mumford
Would dream
That she was Young
And Beautiful
And Free
From Mumford.
And
The children
Would dream
That they were Grown up
And Had Children
Of
Their Own.
And Nightingales
And
All
To the Land of Nod.

ABOUT SPONGES.

Sponges are so common and so familiar that many of us have used them all our lives without stopping to admire their curious and interesting structure, or to inquire into the history of their past lives. Those who have, have profited that they can be squeezed into a small compass when dry, and by soaking into the regular colors: coarse visits of inspection to be removed. We have perhaps noticed also that they are used for filling bottles or purses, and that they will absorb a considerable quantity of water.

You know there has been a doubt whether sponges belong to the animal or to the vegetable kingdom, and for a long time naturalists were in doubt about the matter, but it is now settled that they are animals, living and growing on the bottom of the ocean. Though part of the sponge that readers us is the skeleton. The living sponge is a very curious object, and we must see what we can find out about it.

To begin with, every animal, a picture comes before our minds of such creatures having a mouth to eat with, feet to walk with, or perhaps wings or fins, or some other means of moving about; but the sponges are far from this. They are probably the lowest animals with which you are acquainted. They are mere lumps of heart, so tongs, no mouth and no stomach.

Live sponges consist of jelly-like bodies, united in a mass, and supported by a skeleton of horny fibers, and needle-shaped objects called "spicules." This jelly-like flesh, covering all parts of the skeleton, is of a dull brown or dirty white of an egg, but it rapidly becomes black after death, and also dries up. During life the flesh presents many beautiful colors; in some species it is of a brilliant purple, in others of a fine orange, rose-yellow, etc.

The skeleton varies in different kinds of sponge. In those which are valuable for our use it consists of horny fibers interwoven in all directions until they form a mass like a fine network. But you can easily see with the naked eye, and by help of a magnifying glass you will see beauty you had not imagined, which is lost for this valuable instrument would never have been dreamed of. In our ordinary sponges these fibers are all mixed up with the former living animal, the soft flesh having been removed. It is found that the horny fibers are composed of a substance very similar to the silk of a silk-worm's cocoon. They are exceedingly tough and durable. Most of us have discovered that a dried sponge becomes like an old and tried friend, and that unless it is abused it seems as if might never wear out.

In looking at any sponge you will notice large holes through it, with many small pores scattered between them. The living sponge is constantly drawing in water at the small pores. This water passes through a set of branching canals, and is thrown out from the large holes in the surface. With a microscope little fountains may be seen constantly playing from the large holes of a living sponge. The circulation is kept up by the canals by the movement of "cilia," point like minute hairs, which are constantly but continually. The word cilia is from the Latin "eyelashes" for a resemblance for this is a name we shall often want to use. The stream of water thus passing through the sponge brings to every part of it small particles of food, and all the animal wants for breathing purposes.

Everything that lives must eat and breathe, but how is the sponge to eat without a mouth? When the food touches any part of its body, the soft, jelly-like flesh takes in to form a little bag; at the same time the surrounding parts creep out over the morsel of food, until it is entirely covered and digested. After this the flesh returns to its original position, and any shell or other refuse that remains from the meal is thrown away.

Sponges have a curious manner of producing their young. At certain seasons very small oval masses of jelly are formed in the inner cavities of the animals, which finally drop off. They remain in the canals for a time, and become perfect eggs, after which they are thrown out by the stream issuing from the fountains, and instead of floating to the bottom, as we might suppose such large masses of jelly would do, they swim around as if they meant to have a little sport before commencing the sober realities of life.

You will be interested to know that while these eggs are passing through the canals of the parent sponge, delicate cells (which we learned about just now) were forming at one end of the egg. These cells strike the water with a rapid motion, and the eggs are rowed about through it until they settle down and attach themselves to some rock or shell on the bottom of the ocean, and finally grow up into the perfect sponge. The waters are swarming with these eggs at certain seasons, and great quantities of them are eaten by larger animals.

Sponges are common in nearly all parts of the world, and they differ greatly in size and quality, but few species being useful to man. Some species are nearly round, others are always cup-shaped, some top-shaped, and some branched. A fresh-water sponge is frequently found in our streams, growing upon sticks and stones. It is of a bright green, and when you squeeze the water in a flood of sunlight it is very pretty.

The spicules of sponges grow in a variety of elegant shapes, but they are visible only with a microscope. They are composed of lime or flint, and are sometimes branched. They may be imbedded in the flesh as well as in the horny fibers, thus serving to protect the helpless creatures from being devoured by fish and other animals. In our fine sponges, the skeleton is almost destitute of spicules, while in some others the flesh is supported wholly by spicules, giving them so loose a texture that they are of no value for domestic purposes.

Fine sponges are used by physicians in surgical operations, and are sometimes very expensive. Some are at times value a fancy to a dainty little sponge in the drawing-room about the size of a hickory nut, for instance, to say it, you will probably be surprised at the price asked for it. One dollar. It is common from the Mediterranean Sea and the Red Sea. Other fine sponges are obtained in search for them under rocks and among the coral reefs of the West Indies. The man catchily (Lychnis viscaria). The Turks, who carry on the trade, have a law throughout the Mediterranean employed in collecting sponges that the value of the sponges annually collected is about $1,000,000 or five million dollars. Coarse varieties are found in the Gulf of Mexico and along the Florida Islands. They are scraped off the rocks with forked instruments, and consequently have many fragments.

This demand for sponges has increased in Mediterranean during the last few years that there is cause to fear the supply will be exhausted, unless some way can be found to prevent it. Professor Verrill makes the following suggestions: With this view, attempts have recently been made to raise sponges in the Adriatic Sea by taking cuttings from full-grown ones, and planting them upon stones or other bodies in the sea, and then attach themselves. Several cuttings have been successful, but the operation is a delicate one, requiring great care not to injure the soft flesh. It is necessary to keep the sponge under sea water during the process.

Some of the finer sponges are exceedingly beautiful. The delicate "Venus's flower basket" sponge is the deep sea near the Philippine Islands. It looks like spun glass woven into a beautiful network. It is so delicate that we can scarcely believe that it is made by animals. Its skeleton is sponge is composed of bundle of spicules running lengthwise from end to end, with cross-pieces at regular intervals. The meshes are filled with a pale-brown, corky looking substance, forming also a border to little tube-like holes, and rising into small, sharp-pointed ridges between them. The ridges, instead of having a mixture of the mass glassy skeleton, have their soft substance supported by a multitude of delicate six-rayed spicules interspersed with it, under the microscope, look like little stars in a dark sky. The whole sponge is covered with the finest network, which is also composed of six-rayed spicules, but smaller than those of the ridges, and closely interspersed with what, under the microscope, look like little stars in a dark sky. A Friend in Need is a Friend Indeed,

And by such a one's remarkable advice and self-sacrifice has been lifted and broken thousands. Such a friendship is worth forgiving and such love, from his experience, he advises and instructs, his opinions should be heeded. If kind words can never cost, and good deeds are never lost, the inducement for always doing the good we can to our fellow-men is surely great. Remembering that it is the detail that makes the aggregate true deeds that form the answers—the little kindnesses of life that make existence endurable. As, in the picture, the good old Dr. Jacobs is extending relief to the suffering support of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Backache, Sprains, &c., he will care the wounding of the heart, for his fellow-men in their times of trouble or sickness. To how many have you equal the same?

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

Sheds for Winter.

The winter, where it has not been wet, has thus far been decidedly severe. Beekeeper who for any cause have not provided sufficient shelter for their sheep But the winter is not over yet. It has not begun. We shall have winter enough, even if it should be what we call a mild one, and the most sensible thing that the owner of considerable sheep can do seen at this late day is to build sheds at once. The elaborate plans which often appear in books and agricultural journals with reference to the construction of sheep sheds and barns, are a great deal better on paper than they are any where else. A good shelter can be inexpensively made, and any man of fair judgment can plan and erect a cheap shed if he has anything at all out of which to construct it. It is well understood that while sheep can bear a great deal of cold, they cannot abide dampness, any more than a man who should be compelled to wear a wet overcoat until its fibres had shrunk and stiffened. There is but little doubt that the loss of her mouth of sheep during the past winter and the small lamb crop will be found to be due to the fact that the flocks have not been properly housed.—Cor. New England Farmer.

Successful Bun Culturists' Methods.

A New York State farmer, who grows beans largely, thus describes his methods to the Rural Home. In the best place I select soil, and if I have much I occupy it, say fifteen or twenty loads to the acre. Plow it as late before planting it over as nicely as possible, and cutting a furrow as wide as I can turn. Then fill it in and scatter broadcast the ashes as it is plowed, so as not to turn up the soil. I also scatter a liberal dressing of guano in the furrow, and then plow around the entire lot, so as to avoid back furrows and dead furrows. Then I go over it with a hoe, and thoroughly mix the guano and ashes with the soil. I then plant in rows three feet apart, and by the time the vines begin to run and require attention to the ground so that they will gather the heaps. I then plant the seed in hills, and cultivate them again, and then again just before they blossom. When they are fit to pull, I use a two-horse mowing machine with the cutter bar set low, and cut them off. Then I have a horse rake with the wheel rake, going the same way, taking two of the double rows, and raking them together. I haul up the lever in my hand, keeping the teeth out of the ground so that they will gather the beans free from dust as possible. I rake them into small winrows, then pick them up with a fork, and shock up; they are then left to dry. As the pods are dry, I thresh with a flail, and the beans hand. I draw them in, putting two men with a team driving between the rows, pulling on both sides loading, principally from the ground; as I do not like to yield them much, as it saves the shells them and wastes them in mowing, tread them as little as possible. I put in barrels, putting them in equal distances apart, and mow around them, then keep stirring them up and down, which leaves a place for the air to circulate.

Now in regard to threshing. Some years I thresh with a machine, sometimes I thresh them out with horses. If I thresh with horses, I put them in a large circle; if not, I can tread them out in the winter for less money. My beans generally yield fifty bushels to the acre. Fifty bushels to the acre. You want to know about the profits. Now, that depends altogether on the price, my opinion is, it costs about a dollar, all told, to raise and get a bushel of beans under. So if you get twelve shillings you have fifty cents for your labor.

I consider the bean crop the hardest crop on the soil. It takes the cream from the land in preference to any crop, and I never allow beans to follow beans in the same field. I have heard remark many times that such a piece of land was good for what it wouldn't raise white beans. Now I find that it takes the best land to raise good white beans.

Cesspool Fever.

This is the fever that wrought so much mischief in one of the Washington wards a few years ago. It is said by by good medical authorities to be fatal to many persons every year in New York. The fever is not severe. There is but little headache and no pain or tenderness in the region of the liver, as in case of typhoid fever. Still the tongue is covered with a yellow fur and the appetite is bad. Its chief characteristic is diarrhœa, acute in some cases, but more generally chronic and lasting for months or even years. The patient, if he does not rise to the danger, finds himself reduced to a mere shadow.

The disease is found wherever the contents of cesspools and sub-houses find their way into the ground, and wherever emanations into the air of sleeping-rooms. It is quite apt to prevail at the summer health-resorts, the ignorance of proprietors more than neutralizing the abundant hygienic advantages of nature.

Cases occur even among the White Mountains and at the most famous watering places. At Martha's Vineyard last year, a friend stopped at one of the "cottages" for a season on the island. He states that two of the guests were suddenly seized with summer-cholera sense soon after their arrival. It was found on examination that the privy and the well were only twenty feet apart, and the well was quite a deep one. The contents of the one found its way readily into the sickness.

The son of a physician was taken with disease in a school, and died on the third day after its first symptoms appeared. The boy's father could not dissolve so readily and does not absorb moisture so freely, which causes it to soothe. We have used rock salt but gave it up on account of its high price. The coarse salt answers the purpose well, not costing half as much, and not dissolving much faster. One of the best jobs does not have to be filled oftener than once a month, which is quite a saving of time as compared with the old way. Rock salt is much importance to the greater value of the manure when the cattle are fed in sheds.

Orchard-grass plants would not flourish in the corn was just that age, the stalk had done its life work—produced sufficient shelter for their sheep But the winter is not over yet. It has not begun. We shall have winter enough, even if it should be what we call a mild one, and the most sensible thing that the owner of considerable sheep can do seen at this late day is to build sheds at once. The elaborate plans which often appear in books and agricultural journals with reference to the construction of sheep sheds and barns, are a great deal better on paper than they are any where else. Thought in a Bug and a Wasp.

A small-sized but fleet-running dog chased a large raccoon from a wheat-field, and entered him on the bank of a creek, about a rod from the water. The raccoon faced the dog and sat upon his haunches for battle. The dog seized him just before the fore legs in front and tried to shake him, but could not, for he was heavier than the dog. The animal immediately set his long, sharp teeth in the side of the dog's head and clasped him in his claws. The dog, whining with pain, tried to pull away and shake off the raccoon, but was held fast, when he turned to the creek and dragged the raccoon, which still clung to him, into the creek, where he held him under water, adroitly keeping his own nose out, till the raccoon became so exhausted that the dog shook him off, and then seized him by the throat and mastered him. The scampant of a room with the door open into the street was startled one day by the entrance with a buzzing noise of a large black wasp of the kind which captures spiders to place in their nests for their growing oneeps to feed upon. After flying around the room it went to a corner of the room where a large house spider had made a home for itself in the ceiling, with a long, close hiding-place extending down in the corner. The wasp flew under the web and examined this hiding-place closely, apparently to see if the spider was at home, and then, as if satisfied of that fact, flew out into the room, and, rising about three feet above the center of the web, buzzing and fluttering like a bumble-bee. There was the spider, as rushed out in great haste to capture his prey, and as soon as he came within reach the suspected him up and flew away with him. Was it reason or instinct that caused the action of these two animals under the circumstances? Whatever you—instinct is a blind tendency to some mode of action independent of any consideration on the part of the agent of the end to which the action leads? Did these animals have any consideration or expectation of the result or object to which their actions led?—Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat.

A Picture Worth Beholding.

Hanging between two small windows, and catching the light from a larger one opposite, is a picture in the store of Alpheus Eaton Company, at 52 Broadway, New York—the office of the manager, Mr. W. H. Hall. Instead of the usual dreary department-store, a plainly finished but tastefully furnished room, about 25 by 15 feet in size, stands before the astonished eyes of the specially, on many of whom it has a wonderful attractive effect. It represents a fight of half a dozen rough stone steps leading from the water's edge to the grassy bank of a romantic unpaved lane, and is so perfect in the rugged side of the mountain which rises in stupendous proportions on the background as to make the rank luxuriant growth of foliage in bonds and clusters of wild flowers in the foreground look like real. In the open door of this little temple stands a half concealed figure, with an arm and hand extended, holding forth a small, but well executed figure, with an arm and hand extended, holding forth a small, but well executed figure, with an open, barefooted, lame and decrepid, bears a staff in his hand, and the other hobbles before the divine a small bottle, as we fated be eager-ness. This label bears the words "St. Jacobs Oil the Great German Remedy." Simple as this little rhyme appears to its unsophisticated spectator, it has an influence which it would be difficult to estimate. It is to that picture and the presentation of Mr. Hall's said Mr. Edward J. Douglass, a gentleman connected with Mr. Hall's department, "that I owe my present ability to perform my work. Some weeks ago I was violently attacked with sciatic rheumatism, and how to bear I gave worse, and nothing my family or the doctor could do gave me any relief. I began to think in a few days that my case was hopeless and that I was doomed to be an invalid and helpless cripple for life. But at last I thought of that picture which I had so often looked at with but little interest, and then Mr. Hall came to my bedside, and telling me how St. Jacobs Oil had cured him of a worse and longer standing case than mine, urged me to use the same remedy. I did so that very night, shortly after my wife and to spare it but to apply it thoroughly according to the directions, this she did with a large piece of flannel cloth saturated with the oil, and bound tightly to the affected parts. The next morning I was free from pain, and although a little sore in the hip, was able to dress myself, and the next day resumed my duties in the office as usual as before. Here I am in my usual health and strength, having had no touch of rheumatism or either pain since. Whenever I see one of our drivers or any other person afflicted with rheumatism, or any of the kindred diseases, I point him to the picture in Mr. Hall's office, and then direct him to go for St. Jacobs Oil at once."—*N. NEWS SUMMARY.

Important Intelligence from All Parts

Trial of Guiteau, the Assassin.

GUITEAU made the opening speech in his case on the 26th by announcing that a couple of months had been lumping around the county jails, till the rattling frenzy of shooting or other wise harming the President of the United States should be understood that, if a hair of his head was touched, the officials would be shot. Judge Porter resumed his argument, and addressed himself to the question of insanity as a defense in criminal cases. He endeavored to show that the character of the prisoner and the facts now of record where of such a character that the jury could not, under the law, find that he was sane at the time he committed the act. He contended that the evidence showed that the prisoner had been insane for years, and that he was insane when he committed the act. He argued that the fact that certain persons testified him from time to time that they considered him sane was not sufficient to sustain the theory of sanity, unless it was also shown that the facts upon the principles of law and medical jurisprudence constituted the speaker. Referring to the case of Hadfield, he said he failed to distinguish the case of Judge Porter said it was left in this State that the prisoner was responsible to the world that he was insane, and that he was not responsible for his acts. Judge Porter then attempted to show that the case of Hadfield was similar to Guiteau's final murder. The prisoner was examined and shown to be a fool. Anybody will agree you. Porter will make the American people believe I'm not a patriot. I suffer in bonds as a martyr in the cause of Christ. I am not a fool. I am a lawyer, and understand the law. Judge Porter said: "Counsel the conduct of this defendant was such as to satisfy Charles Cowles, who walked peacefully to the scaffold, with his hands bound behind him, and his eyes bound, and a strap and handkerchief bor with his mouth, that he was sane. Counsel for the people does not understand the law. Neither Judge Porter compared the prisoner to William Scott, and showed that the actions of the prisoner compared with the remarks pointed him on the scaffold. Judge Porter said that the prisoner had partisan, and was a tool of men who had used him for their purposes. Judge Porter said that the prisoner was a tool of men who had used him for their purposes. A Lesson on Potatoes.

The almost universal failure of the early planting of potatoes leads one to inquire if there is no means whereby we can increase the probabilities of a crop. Potatoes have come to be considered a most uncertain crop. Here and there we find a farmer with a choice piece of light clay land, who uniformly produces a paying crop of potatoes. The reason for the success in such cases is believed to be in the good soil, rather than in any specific merits of culture. If we find one in the part season who has made a good crop, it is fair to conclude that his method of planting and cultivating must have credit.

There is good reason for suspecting that where potatoes are not planted more than two or three inches deep, they will fail in a dry season. We made four plantings last spring. The first rain, of early June, we took the same day, as soon in April as the garden ground could work well. The subsoil of our garden is clay, and the soil rich and deep. Five rows were planted in the usual manner, in furrows three feet apart and covered three or four inches deep. Alongside of these we planted five rows in the same way, in every respect, as I then covered them with leaf-mould drawn in the depth of six or eight inches. Note as to the result:

The first planting made a good half crop of medium-sized potatoes. The second five rows, planted same day and in the same way, except covered with straw, made a crop of huge smooth potatoes and a very few small ones. The vines on the first planting came up a month sooner than on those planted and covered with straw.

About the 25th of April we planted on bottom land in the same way, and what where the shock corn had stood. The ground was in perfect order, loose and mellow from digging, and was free from burning the rickings of the corn stubble-taken off the same day the corn was husked. We planted eight bushels of good seed out to two rows in shallow furrows and covered with a hoe, and the result in expecting a splendid crop. The potatoes were cultivated the same as the other plantings. The crop panned out at just twenty-five bushels of very small potatoes, and many of them looking dry and lack of anime end.

At middle of May we planted three rows, forty rods long, in shallow furrows covered lightly with a hoe, and then a foot deep with the remains of last year's straw-stack. The result was no potatoes worth digging, since we could not plant them on account of the straw.

We waited a month or more after this planting and the ground was in perfect order dry before the covering of straw had been put on. Although rain came for about ten weeks to wet the straw, and the weather became intensely hot and dry. The potatoes under the straw were as dry as bone, two months after planting, at the time for digging came we found an occasional hill of fair and two or three smooth potatoes. In such places the straw had been very wet when put on; where the straw had been dry and loose the potatoes that had done no good, not more than half of them even coming up.

From these four plantings the best and poorest crops came from under the straw. Had we planted a month earlier and put the straw on before the ground over the potatoes had sprouted, we should have had a good crop, where by planting late and covering the dry ground with straw, as it never was dampened by the three seasons' rains between the time of planting and digging, the tubers lacked moisture. Potatoes require more moisture and a lower temperature than was possible under the conditions of our crop. At the time we applied the mulch tens of potatoes on exhibition, shown by a farmer who had made enough to tell his story, that the secret of that lot of Early Rose being so much larger, on size and brighter than any others exhibited. He planted early and covered at once with straw, six or eight inches deep. He claims that he never fails to secure a good crop under straw, and seldom fails in his main crop of field culture. He advocates deep planting, and early.

This lesson in potato planting is, not that potatoes must grow on a hollow, but that in a dry season, if potatoes are planted early, on good ground, and deep, and covered with straw while the ground is yet damp, a big crop of excellent potatoes may be expected. Again, we conclude that potatoes on good clay land, such as our best plantings were made in, will make a good crop in seasons and with culture that will give a complete failure on sandy soil.

A mulch, rich soil, not subject to sudden extremes of heat or moisture, is better for potatoes than a loose soil with a good growth of subsoil. We yet have great faith in straw covering as an equalizer of moisture and temperature of soil about the tubers, but it must be applied before the ground becomes dry and hot. We believe it is not too early to plant potatoes in February or March, if only the ground will work well. Fall plowing will help to potato culture.—Cor. Ohio Farmer.

Hints to Transplanters.

The Gardener's Monthly reviews some of the many practical things brought out in experience and now confirmed as good doctrine. It says:

It is now established beyond all question that a dense shade taken on part of a poor soil will not bear nearly enough as well as one that has been well fed. For instance, if five years ago two Norway spruces were planted, both of same age and in soil just alike, but one shaded, and we advise no manure for all that time and the other have a little manure every year, the chances of success in removal will be very much in favor of the well-fed tree. Numbers of trees with good roots and well planted die after removal, simply from a very weakened constitution brought about by poor living.

Another capital fact of practical value to transplanters has been developed, which is only just now becoming well known. It has always been understood in this country that a transplanted tree is safer for being pruned, but the pruning generally consisted of shortening in all the branches, strong as well as weak, but it is now found that the tree should not be shortened in, but merely thinned out. All the weaker branches should be cut out and the strong ones left.

And there is the practice becoming ever better known than others, also first learned through our pages, that it is not possible to pound the earth too tight about the transplanted tree. It is not possible to avoid all risks in transplanting. Though with more be so perfected that some will not die, but assuredly where all the conditions can be controlled, will be less than ever before.

Another thing may be remembered, that trees die by winter remembering out. Therefore give the roots all the chances to own to heal and grow before cold drying winds and frosts come. One of the best of these chances is to plant early. Plant as soon as you can after the fall rains come. It makes little difference whether the yellowed leaves have fallen or not.

Table Notes.

A table dainty arrange with food daintily cooked and served produces a more favorable impression upon guests than one more elaborate without the added decorations and an unending variety of perhaps poorly prepared dishes, with no regard for order or appropriateness. The habit of serving sauce two articles at time, and never a sauce with a course does away with a great deal of the confusion which characterizes an ill-fashioned dinner. Hardly there need not be much great variety for a nice dinner or supper, and the more simple the better more, as longer time is consumed by the meal, and generally more opportunity is afforded for sociability.

The table should be laid with the greatest care, first covered with a mat or cover of cotton flannel, which will add greatly to the appearance of the subsequent linen. Some of the novelties are apples oranges and lemmons tied around with narrow ribbon, which is first passed under the fruit and tied in the end of a small narrow, gilt-edged card, which has been more appropriate for breakfast parties. A fancy clothespin is sometimes employed to hold a card.

Fruit and flower decorations are lower than formerly, and for several reasons more desirable. It is quite in order to remove the middle from oranges and lemons, and have the orange divided into quarters, or even into smaller ones, and the lemmons cut into several pieces. They are then interspersed with grapes and candied fruits of different kinds.

In order to have a more novel elegance, and without confusion, it is of the utmost importance that every detail should be attended to beforehand, and that the servants know just exactly what they are expected to do. Then the servants should not be called to do other things when they are passing a certain dish, or when they should be occupied with and disorder and changes the even tenor of a meal more than to have some one come in late. It disarranges everything.

There is no obligation on the part of the guests as well to observe any unpleasantness to a dinner or visiting at a friend's; it is a breach of etiquette to be late to a meal, especially so if there are a number of guests. Invitations to dinner or tea should always be issued for a time named so that a hostess may know for certain how many to prepare for, and what number to arrange her table.—Cleveland Leader.

How to Distinguish Small-Pox.

When the passengers in a Third Avenue car became restless yesterday one caught sight of the face of a man who got in at Ninth Street, some of them moved into other cars—all of the others except one went to the other end of the car and sat close together there. The face of the man who caused this commotion was covered with big pimples. He would have had the end of the car to himself but for another passenger who remained close to him, and then resumed the reading of a newspaper. The other passengers looked at this couple curiously. One of them expected an old fashioned dinner. Really there need not be much great variety for a nice dinner or supper, and the more simple the better more, as longer time is consumed by the meal, and generally more opportunity is afforded for sociability.

"He has it, sure," said the other. "I had been looking at him when you came in, and I got sure, that's all."

"Are you a physician?"

"I am a surgeon."

"What is acne?"

"Acne is merely a cutaneous disease, producing an eruption like what you see on his face. Small-pox does not look like that at all."

"How does it look?"

"Well, whenever you see pimples depressed in the center you may raise hair that is a sign of small-pox. Small-pox pustules appear first on the face, then on the neck and hands, and afterward on the body. At first they are the size and have the solidity of small shot, but a layman would not be able to judge of them until on and after the fourth day, when they become depressed in the center and surrounded by a circle of pink that turns a dark crimson. The pimples are often so thick that they run together. There is an odor accompanying the disease that, once noticed, cannot be forgotten. I am sorry I can't tell you more, but I must get off here."

The passengers were interested in what the surgeon said, and disappointed when his short lecture was ended.—N. Y. Sun.

Grecce Drifting Into a Republic.

The recent election in Greece seas of more than national importance, and the disposition which announces that both sides will claim a victory are probably right in saying further that the true result will not be known until the Chamber meets. Not only is the election important from the fact that the new Provinces in which the electoral franchise is exercised by men to whom it is altogether new have returned thirty-five members, but because there is to Greece a Republican movement which exists now for the first time to have reached formidable proportions. King George has grown steadily unpopular, of late years, and the Queen never makes he has received for disregard of popular wishes seem not to have made him any wiser. He has a love for unrestricted power, appears, in fact, to think he ought to rule with the same freedom as the caciques in the north and east of him, where yoke his country has in half years so fast slaken off. In 1875 he lost in Minister Bulgaris a man after his own heart, but was compelled to dismiss him in favor of a Liberal Ministry, the members of which, however, after being a short time in office, soon in their resignations became like King and Queen in spite of their protests to make changes in the army, and to sign war documents as they pleased. It suggests high and noble principles of action.

A Bostonian's Bet and How He Won It.

A young man in Boston remarked to a leading comedian of one of the public theaters that he was anxious to attend one of Miss Adelina Patti's concerts, the second, to hear the world-renowned songster sing that beautiful melody, "Home, Sweet Home."

"But, my boy, you're not going to pay five dollars for a seat, surely," remarked the comedian.

"No, you see we must crush this monopoly of these foreign artists, and you must hear 'Home, Sweet Home,' and above all the fair Patti," responded the admiring youth.

"But how do you know how?" asked he.

"Well, I'll write to her, and I bet I'll get an answer."

"Yes," interrupted the comedian, with a laugh, "requesting you to purchase your ticket at the usual price."

"No, on the contrary, the letter will inclose a ticket."

"I've dollars that you don't get it."

"Done. You're lost," remarked the young Yankee.

He accordingly wrote Patti a letter, inclosing a ticket of a review he was issuing over John Howard Payne, the author of "Home, Sweet Home," stating that he was a friend and sympathizer of the dead Payne, having been present at his funeral in Tunis, Africa, in 1852, and also remarked that it would be the sincere wish of his friends once again near the beloved song of his old friend.

Since Patti immediately returned a letter, inclosing one of the best seats in the house, the youth thus winning the wager.

But the amusing part of the story is yet to be told. The young man went to the concert naturally stately, in fear the seat might have been marked that was to be occupied by the pseudo-companion of Payne, in the event of which at the interview was inevitable concerning the last moments of the author of "Home." As he was proceeding to his seat—the third from the side—an old gentleman was about to seat himself on the first seat. With presence of mind, our young friend remarked to the other gravely that he had better take the seat he was to occupy, as it was far more desirable, and that as he was to go out early during the concert he would be sure to greatly inconvenience him. It will fill more than any other piece of paper of its size and value in the world. It never grows old, however, as it will keep good for many years. Like a good wife, it is always ready to do its duty, and it is the cause of a great deal of pleasure. It is the means of bringing joy to the heart of the lonely, and perhaps prevents the suicide of many a despairing one. It is the messenger that carries the glad tidings of a new baby, makes mates of lovers, carries many a message of love to the absent one. It brings us the news of the death of a loved one, and carries many a message of sympathy to the bereaved. It is the means of bringing us

On the Gallows Must Guiteau Expiate His Crime.

Scoville's Motion for a New Trial Denied.

The Assassin Sentenced to be Hanged June 30.

Special Dispatch to the Detroit Free Press Telegram.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT WEATHER

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—Ten days ago the assassin, Guiteau, stood up in court and heard the verdict of the jury pronounced, the verdict which said he was guilty of murdering the President of the United States. Until the evening when the jury brought in this verdict, snow was piled up in the streets of Washington and rain was pouring down in torrents making an ominous noise as it fell upon the roof above the old criminal court room. Today Washington is experiencing the worst snow storm which the city has known for years, and as Guiteau sits his counsel behind out the windows they could see nothing but driving snow drifting about the streets.

COURT COMES IN.

It was generally expected that sentence would be pronounced today. Still there were comparatively few spectators who braved the storm to go to the court this forenoon. Every one was confident that Judge Cox would refuse the motion for a new trial. Guiteau came in all bundled up in a big overcoat and notwithstanding the disagreeable weather looked feeling cheerful and confident. The snow always comes before a calm," he remarked to a lady whom he greeted and handed his autograph, and from whom he graciously collected 25 cents. Counsel on both sides of the case were all on hand except Judge Porter, who is in New York. After short preliminary skirmish Judge Cox commenced to look to pieces all arguments and affidavits submitted by Mr. Scoville in support of his motion. Before he had been talking half everybody knew, and when better than Guiteau himself, that the case was hopeless. Guiteau was wild and excited after the proceedings had continued. Several times he turned up on his gaoler and savagely commanded them to mind their own business. As the judge proceeded with his winding down of Scoville's supports, Guiteau's wrath turned upon his poor brother-in-law, whom he charged to his inmost concern. He finally yelled out at Scoville that it was his treason, which he had stupidly adhered to, that had brought both a verdict of guilty.

THE CRISIS.

When Judge Cox had concluded Mr. Corkhill solemnly arose and in a low, distinct voice asked that sentence to pronounced. Then entered Guiteau. His smile in the court room left, and he began the dialogue to deter passing sentence, as he did not expect a decision. The judge paid no attention to the appeal, however, and told him to stand up. The prisoner rose and stood in the dock at Mr. Corkhill with three pearls behind him. Corkhill said Mr. Dunlap and Mr. Cox—Cox, Corkhill, while Mr. Reed lay some distance away. Spectators crowded forward and a dead silence fell over the room as Judge Cox delivered his sentence. He was interrupted several times by Guiteau. "May God have mercy on your soul," said the Judge at the finish. "May the Lord have mercy on your soul also," shouted the prisoner, almost before the former words were out of the judge's mouth. Guiteau was greatly excited and looked the part that he is.

CELL AND SCAFFOLD.

After sentencement he was hurried into the van and taken immediately to jail. Arriving there he seemed to be in better spirits and was quite loquacious. He said he did not expect a new trial, but hoped and expected that sentence would be deferred for three days. He says that he court en banc will hold that the case was out of the jurisdiction of the lower court. He says he has engaged two eminent law yers to go before that court, but will not name them now. The exalted ones which Guiteau will be hanged now stands in the jail yard nine feet tall. It was built in 1879 for the execution of a negro who murderer, who, however, did not test its quality as he succeeded in having his sentence commuted to imprisonment for life. In 1880 it was used for the hanging of negro Stone, who murdered a red five minutes after the spring was pulled and with much force that his head was nearly torn so-eral from his body. A few months later Babe Debord and Edward Queenan, what befell the Lafayette and her wife.

At one time a rumor was put afloat ing what were and passing notes, wrapped from the scaffold. Very an rumors attended these hangings, but it is safe to say that the public are given half a dozen that will be on hand to call there on the 30th of next June to see Guiteau swing a rope.

GOVERNOR JEROME.

A Bliss Slander Upon Him Answered. Special to the Free Press.

The Hastings Banner has changed its tune. Governor Jerome was guilty of "treason" during his recent visit at Yorktown. This change in a fair to please a gentleman whose name was Governor Michigan. I know that my friends in Michigan will not assume me of thrusting myself into this matter, and in the interests of justice I will risk the charge coming from others.

The Detroit Free Press will not be accused of partiality to Governor Jerome. Judge Brown, editor of that paper, was one of the Yorktown party. He had per fect opportunity of observation. If Governor Jerome was "drunk" he would have seen it. If Gov. Jerome was conducting himself unbecomingly he would have known it. And saying, knowing, Judge Brown would have said it. But he did not tell a story of this character. On the contrary, the Free Press of the 5th inst., in an editorial presumably written by Judge Brown, says:

When a journal like the Hastings Ban ner arrogantly misrepresents the Governor as to speak of his "depravity" between "sots," and of his "reeling night into bed with Governor on the Yorktown expedition, it is impossible to refrain from characterizing the attack as utterly indefensible, unfounded and disgraceful. Your correspondent's conduct on the Yorktown excursion, throughout, was that of a gentleman fully conscious of the fact that he stood accredited as the representative of a great and influential state. Jerome and so with all on his staff, the same is known to every respect. There is not a citizen of this state who will not endorse it as shown by the good name which Michigan left at Yorktown and in the remembrance of the representatives from other states who came in contact with the governor, the soldiers and navy even delegation.

That the governor might have been more full among us, to the benefit of the party, is quite possible. If so he was partly by circumstances, as it is well to remember in these days, when newspapers and reporters are provided that Baltimore has some merit. But to speak of him as the Banner does, in the same language which would be used in describing a "hammer," is an unpardonable outrage."

The above statements are true, wholly true, and nothing but true.

I had the honor to be in the company of Governor Jerome on the trip from Alexandria to Washington, to Washington, and on the boat from Washington to Yorktown. I had the honor to be with him during the entertainment and reception of the three days at Yorktown, and I was in his quarters and in the company during all of the time, except at Yorktown, except during the last hours of when he was dining with Gen. Gosport at New York.

During all this time I saw no liquor in any disruption about his very use did I hear him at any time touch liquors of any description. In one of the other tents some of the officers did have liquor, but I never saw the governor take one drop. I will not say that the Governor did not drink when at Gen. Carroll's dinner, for I do not know. Nor can I say with positiveness that he did not drink liquor during the day. But that I do say, that not the slightest appearance or speech was there given him at any time the slightest intoxication due to any such liquors. Every statement to a contrary effect is a wicked and malicious lie. The charge of being "boisterous" or "noisy" is equally groundless and false. From what I have seen of Governor Jerome I do not believe it possible for him to be boisterous. He is eminently not one to create a scene. Not even in the way mentioned by Governor Cleveland, when he was in the company of the beautiful ex-Empress Eugenie, so well does Jerome conduct himself and observed a dignity of appearance and gentlemanliness of speech which generally commented upon by all who came in Michigan headquarters. And every during the occasion when visited by the leading men and officials from Kentucky, Virginia and other states, there never was a word uttered louder than might proper ly be used in a gentleman's house. In conclusion I desire to report and explain that Judge Brunton's work in the Free Press—Governor Jerome's conduct on the Yorktown excursion throughout—is that of a gentleman fully conscious of the fact that he would be accepted as the representative of a great and important state. And wherever even otherwise is a liar and the truth is not in him.

O. T. BEARD.

The Jeannette Survivors.

Lieut. Giles B. Harber and Master W. H. Schweize of the navy are to leave New York on a detail ordered by Secretary Hunt for the purpose of assisting in the search for the missing survivors of the Jeannette in the northern regions of Siberia. They expect to reach Irkutsk, the capital of Eastern Siberia and the farther on point at which there is a telegraph station about the middle of March. The detail is in accordance with a suggestion received on Wednesday morning last from Lieut. Danenhower, who is now at Irkutsk, proposing to charter a vessel in the spring, and search along the Siberian coast for the missing boat of Lieut. Chipp.

Within the last week over a dozen additions have been made to our knowledge of

NEWS SUMMARY.

Important Intelligence from All Parts

The Application for a New Trial of Guiteau.

THERE was a large crowd in Judge Cox's court-room on the morning of the 24 when Mr. Scoville entered to argue the motion for a new trial in the case of Guiteau. The prisoner took his seat by his counsel, and looked as bright and unconcerned as ever. Mr. Scoville said that he had expected that one or four days more in addition to the two days of argument that he had asked for would be given during the trial of the case, but as that had not been granted he would be compelled to hurry through with his argument. He would, however, be willing to submit the case on the argument already made, and on the points presented in the motion for a new trial, but he preferred to argue the case orally. He would not

—Chas. A. Aldrich returned Wednesday from a two months' trip to the regions of Rogers City, Old Mackinac and Charlevoix, where he has been looking for a good location for a permanent home.

—Architects and many ladies on the scene, is getting to be a common occurrence, and one which gives pain to those who like to see the primeval forest up and down our reserves, but by village people and being in a state of activity and overlooking the broad lake, presenting beautiful undulations and interspersed with shapely escarpments, it is indeed a beautiful spot in summer, and should remain as nature is intent, and be devoted to town purposes of our people and summer guests.

—It is more probable than the least truth to report connections across the narrows of Mackinaw, in winter, will prove a success. The Cheboygan Democrat says: "Capt. Ames of the Algoma, has received his contract to keep the ice channel in the narrows open during the winter, and has been out up at Mackinaw, outside to the Straits, for a week. Capt. Ames says a new Weil steamer and tug-boat are to be built to keep the shoot and although this boat would cross the straits, it could not land. This is just the difficulty that experienced captains seem afraid of. There is no doubt but that boats can be built to go through the ice, and Capt. Ames is now on the lake preparing the steamer and when the gales pole it up 16 to 20 feet high, as they frequently do, we hear that can possibly be connected as well as through ice."

—Steps have been taken to survey the proposed route for the railroad from Grand to Grand Traverse city, and another route is to be surveyed from Logansport, Ind., to this city on the Bay. The objective point of each route otherwise seems to be the Straits of Mackinac, outside to the northern ice ways. Capt. Ames says a new Weil steamer and tug-boat are to be built to keep the shoot and although this boat would cross the straits, it could not land. This is just the difficulty that experienced captains seem afraid of. There is no doubt but that boats can be built to go through the ice, and Capt. Ames is now on the lake preparing the steamer and when the gales pole it up 16 to 20 feet high, as they frequently do, we hear that can possibly be connected as well as through ice."

—Harbor Springs Republican: A young man reached Cross Village from St. Ignace the other day with his bed loaded thereon. It appears that he left St. Ignace in search of employment and reached Mackinaw City, where he was informed that he could get work about twelve miles from there at a mill. He at once proceeded there, but was again disappointed. Deay on there he got his bed and continued in the woods and on the beach three days and nights, with scarcely anything to eat, and no work, with work in sight. He finally reached Cross Village, where he was presently cared for, and to doing well.

—Over the last meeting of the village council it was voted to submit to the electors at the next election the question of the purchase of the land owned by Mr. Fox, on the west of the village, for a park or park. The assessors' line for assessment was also established then, and it will be examined by the council in the matter. After the people, During the summer months the land in question is much used, and even now it is a favorite resort for many villagers and summer guests.

—Last week Wednesday the Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian church met at the residence of Mrs. Dr. Lewis, and elected officers for the ensuing year. The following ladies were chosen: President, Mrs. Dr. Lewis; Vice President, Mrs. Dr. Bennett; Secretary, Mrs. Dr. Snyder; Treasurer, Mrs. Dr. Lewis. The society is in a flourishing condition, and has been instrumental in doing much good during the past year.

Liberal Club.

The Liberal Club met at the residence of Mrs. Dr. Lewis, on Friday evening last, and, in connection with other business that took place, it found to appear by the reading of the lecture delivered before the Liberal Club, by Prof. Frank J. Devlin, on the evening of the 8th inst. His subject "Facts and Fancies," was presented in a very entertaining manner. His treatment of the facts seen upon in the field of science, presented facts well enough to astonish the credulous, while his progressive fancies honored on the extravagant, and frequently exceed an audible smile. All in all, his lecture was able, well delivered and well received. The Liberal Club now numbers 30. Dr. H. P. Snyder will lecture before the Club on the subject of "Common Sentiment." We have no doubt but the Dr. will present the subject in a manner that will well repay for the trouble of coming out to hear him, and we hope arrangements for him a full house on that occasion.

Tammany's Victory.

The tail has wagged the dog once more. A month ago the glorious Democracy of the Empire State began to assemble at Albany with their noses in the air. They had gained a famous victory, and the Republicans were sidedressed in both branches of the Legislature. There was no danger from Tammany—not a bit of it. A Democrat was a Democrat the world over, and the handful of Tammanyites would come into line at the word. They were Tailney, Boyd and Grady in the Senate—just the number that would have sufficed on a certain memorable occasion to save Sodom and Gomorrah. Bigne, Costello, Maher, Patten and Sheehy in the Assembly. The presence of these men would prevent the Republicans from organizing either House, and who, reading their names over, could doubt that they were not well grounded in the good old Jeffersonian principles to hesitate about joining hands with the great party nurtured by Silas Wright, Martin Van Buren and Bill Tweed?

But there was a certain rum down at the City of New York named John Kelly. Now this John had gone up to Syracuse in 1879 with seventy-two good men and true, to present the commission of Governor Robinson. Failing in that, these three and one or two dozen statesmen had walked out of the Convention in Indian file, its Tammany braves should, and proceeded to nominate their leader for the Governorship, whereby they threw the election into the hands of the Republicans. John remembered all this, and so did the Tilden Democracy, who had stuck to Robinson, and when the Tammany forces put on their war paint and went to the polls the next year, they were kindly but firmly cast out of the way they chewed. Mr. Tilden was not nominated, and Kelly was overjoyed at that, and he was further placated by being invited to speak from the platform in support of the nominations he and his had made.

But John did not doubt that the lesson he had taught the party in his own State, and the quasi-recognition he had got from the National Convention at Cincinnati, would insure respectful treatment in the nominating Convention at Albany last October, and so he chartered a train of parlor cars and a band of music, and rigged up his men in light overcoats, strapped on his and his glasses made of the large skins of goats. They covered the cars with patriotic mottoes, hoisted flags on the locomotive, hung banners from the windows and the rear platforms, and proceeded up the Hudson River, desolating restaurants and beer shops by the way. Arrived at Albany, they rushed from the depot a mile and a half in procession and marched through the streets to the inspiring strains of "The Irish Washerwoman," and received a salute of aprons and pillow-cases waved from the upper windows of the Delavan House by all the chambermaids in the city. In due time they presented themselves in Twelfth Hall, and were, to use no very violent figure of speech, kicked down stairs. All these things John treasured up in his heart, and they are fresh in the minds of all the Democrats of the State of New York at the present day.

When the Legislature met a day or two after New Year's, with the balance of power in John Kelly's hands, he did not charter any railroad trains, or go to see anybody. He sat down and waited. What inquiries came, he told the brethren what he wanted. He did not care to have a Tammany man elected Speaker of the Assembly or President pro tem of the Senate. He preferred that it should be a Democrat, and he would support him. If he could not get a Democrat, he would support a Republican. If he could not get a Republican he would support a Democrat. He was a prominent man among eminent men. He is yet sound in mind and body. As far, we mean, as his inner sense of right is concerned—but what he means by it has the South forgotten the Last Carver. If so, what must these mavericks, parlor-dogs, memorial days and the steady increase of military schools, with the terrific corruption and fraud of Texas, is exacting a Southern youth who lets not some military training and does not know the use of a musket or rifle, a fund under school books and see if they are not worried by the ghosts of the rebellion, walking in arms, with its visor down, in the shadowy platform of the Lost Cause.

The wish is the father of the thought, and we are not going to say what we may desire. Besides, prosperity and strength decline in the North in peace and unity. Davis and the South.

"History is philosophy, teaching by example," and one of its smallest lessons is the danger of extensive territory to the integrity of a republic. When Rome had conquered the world, she found that even the semi-civilized character of its Republic was incompetent to control the magnificent dimensions of her territory, and under the influence of private ambition and public corruption, her Government became concentrated into a single Imperial head. That was not the way of the telegraph and railroad with a net work of iron nerves, easily connecting the uttermost ends of a continent with the central administration, and, therefore, the parallel with our Government does not exactly obtain. But in one particular does similarity exist. The especial defect of such an enlarged jurisdiction is the necessary ignorance of one part of the country concerning the habits and ideas of another. Engrossed with their immediate interests and interlocutors, the people have little time to consider the sentiments or prejudices of those who live hundreds—or, as with us, thousands of miles away, and are surprised to discover upon some unexpected occasion that they know so little of each other. This was entirely exemplified in our late struggle, and the sentiment of the South and the determination of Lincoln to "let the erring braves should, and proceeded to nominate their leader for the Governorship, whereby they threw the election into the hands of the Republicans. John remembered all this, and so did the Tilden Democracy, who had stuck to Robinson, and when the Tammany forces put on their war paint and went to the polls the next year, they were kindly but firmly cast out of the way they chewed. Mr. Tilden was not nominated, and Kelly was overjoyed at that, and he was further placated by being invited to speak from the platform in support of the nominations he and his had made.

A Snake Story.

To get a snake out of a bottle is a tedious job; in whatever position it is turned, the head will be directed upward, so that the only way to induce him to come out is to place the bottle upright or nearly so, even then the head is withdrawn on the slightest alarm and the position is by no means favorable to its transference to a box. If the door or opening of the latter will admit of it, the best plan is to put the bottle smoothed into the box and let the snake crawl out at its leisure, first "checking off" the bottle with a wedge of paper or wood, lest it should roll over on the reptile, and fastening a string to it in order that it may be removed without difficulty at the earliest possible opportunity.

One of the most poisonous snakes I ever possessed was brought to me in a brandy-bottle, and after twisting, and shaking, and tapping it for a long time without avail, I grew impatient. The tail just then happened to protrude about half an inch, so I seized it with my fingers, and, rapidly drawing the body through the other hand, had the reptile safely in my grip behind his death-dealing jaws, now dangling within a couple of inches of the soft fleshy part of the palm. But the slide of my snake-box was shut pretty securely, and I drew it back with one hand; so I was obliged to let the snake slip back in the bottle again. Having set the box up in order for the next scene or a reception, I once more essayed to lay hold of him by the tail, but now most provokingly, an amount of maneuvering would bring that useful member to the top. Snakes have no ears, and the useful sagging converted my patience into desperation, and at length, when I saw the tail about to be twisted in the mouth of the bottle, I stuck my forefinger in recklessly, to try to secure it.

That was hopeless, as I might have known; but it certainly did cost my spine a little when I discovered, on attempting to withdraw it, that my finger was in the snake's mouth, and he twisted it with all my might, for the brute was feeling his way, and my fluttering tongue was rapidly approaching the unhappy flight that involuntarily curled up its prehensile tail, and I deaf to his attendance of which nearly dislocated all my fingers. But I was no use, and with a yell I seized the bottle high in the air, intending to smash it on the head of my bunk. I distinctly felt the snake, who momentarily inverted, fall on the end of my finger, as I flung my hand up the bottle slipped off and fell on the deck, breaking me, fortunately without breaking. By this time I gave a loud cry for help, the voice

NEWS SUMMARY.

Important Intelligence from All Parts.

Congressional.

Among the bills introduced in the senate on the 5th was one by Mr. Hill, (N.Y.) for the establishment of illegal entries and sales of public lands and for extending the pre-emption money, and one by Mr. Harrison, defining the powers and jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission. A bill was passed directing that the portrait of Thomas Jefferson, by Rembrandt Peale, now in the possession of the Pennsylvania Historical Society, be copied and placed in the Capitol. Pending the bill to provide for the payment of the claims of certain Indian traders, the Senate adjourned.

A communication from the Pennsylvania Railroad company was presented to the house of representatives on the 5th by the speaker, showing the amount of foreign exchange between Mexico and the United States. Several bills and resolutions were introduced in the House, among them one by Mr. Hiscock, for the appointment of an additional judge for the northern district of New York; and one by Mr. Buckner, for the relief of the Frankfort and Cincinnati Railroad company. Mr. Pound, to regulate payment of funds to certain court officers, and to prevent the issuing of fees in blank books. The Appropriation bill was then before the house.

The bill to appropriate $5,000,000 for the relief of the crops in the Southern States was introduced in the Senate on the 6th, but Mr. Logan was absent. Mr. Maxey urged the consideration of the bill to create a bureau of immigration, and Mr. Hoar objected to its consideration at present, and moved that it be referred to the committee on the judiciary. After a speech on the merits of the bill, it was postponed to the 19th inst. In the House the bill authorizing the issuance of $5,000,000 in bonds to relieve the destitute was the unfinished business. Mr. Blount, (Ga.) offered a substitute for the bill, providing that no money shall be appropriated except upon the requisition of the governor of the State in which the destitution exists, and that the money shall be expended by the Secretary of War. Mr. Blount, (Ga.) spoke in favor of the bill, and Mr. Hiscock, for the committee on appropriations, opposed it. Mr. Buckner, for the friends of the Southwestern Exposition, asked for the passage of the bill to authorize the issue of $1,000,000 in bonds for the relief of the sufferers by the late floods. The Appropriation bill was then considered.

Mr. Maxey urged the consideration of the bill, and Mr. Hoar objected to its consideration at present, and moved that it be referred to the committee on the judiciary. After a speech on the merits of the bill, it was postponed to the 19th inst. In the House the bill authorizing the issuance of $5,000,000 in bonds to relieve the destitute was then considered. Mr. Blount, (Ga.) offered a substitute for the bill, providing that no money shall be appropriated except upon the requisition of the governor of the State in which the destitution exists, and that the money shall be expended by the Secretary of War. Mr. Blount, (Ga.) spoke in favor of the bill, and Mr. Hiscock, for the committee on appropriations, opposed it. Mr. Buckner, for the friends of the Southwestern Exposition, asked for the passage of the bill to authorize the issue of $1,000,000 in bonds for the relief of the sufferers by the late floods. The Appropriation bill was then considered.

The bill to appropriate $5,000,000 for relief in the destitute in the Southern States was taken up in the Senate on the 10th, but Mr. Logan was absent. "Time day for the mess," says one of our Hayesites to a friend. "What mess?" "Why, the human mess of course. Ha! ha! ha!"

The tax collector says that from the number of dogs he encounters, compared with the number given in feather assessed, there must have been a great number of puppies in Hayes last "spring."

The railroad fun already begins to "flag," and the candidates for spring offices are looming up in formidable array, and somebody's months are watering for plums they will never get.

We did not receive any calendars, but Dr. Crozier, of Charlevoix, sent us a St. Jacobs calendar which an secret the same purpose. We were pleased with the drama of the Siberian twelve hours.—It does not apply to us though.

One of the Hayesites says, that after careful consideration he has come to the conclusion that the only way to secure a railroad subsidy is on the top rail of a reliable fence about two miles in a north easterly direction from the village.

Recently one of the steamboats of this town was drawing wood, when he was met by one of the divine purity who had been to market and had a heavy load of wood with goods. He demanded half the rope when upon the members of the Legislature the point. Quite a lengthy debate ensued when the steamboat became convinced it was but justice to give the Rev. gentleman half the load. He commenced to unload his wood, preparatory to turn out, when the elder "sucking it would pay time attempted to turn out, whereby some sudden deviation in the snow he was precipitated, load and all in about 3 feet of the battery element. That steamboat has one fewer in the ears of the good man. DIMOND.

[n2814] Dr. G. W. Crozier.

Keen observers who have studied the Mormon question agree that the inclusion of proof is the great obstacle in the way of stamping out the crime of polygamy. Dr. John Hall the eminent Presbyterian divine of New York, who lately spent some time in Utah investigating its institutions, has recently made public the views and impressions received by him. He looks upon polygamy as "the blighting curse of a territory rich in all the great material resources. The degradation sin is opposed to the fundamental principles of the American constitution, it is in open antagonism to the genius of our Christian civilization. It is a stain upon our character as a nation. It is liable to spread and to poison the morals of the community generally and should therefore be put down." Like most others he had no special plan to present, but suggests that Congress may be asked to fix a date at and beyond which entrance into polygamic relations would involve total and complete disfranchisement.—One difficulty in the way of necessary legislation to the Doctor's mind is the fact that these polygamous relations were contracted in good faith, the members and children cannot be legislated out of existence nor out of their rights, and that whatever legislation is passed should be with reference to the future rather than to the past.

Congressional.

In the Senate on the 16th a motion by Mr. Hoar to take up the anti-Polygamy bill out of its regular order was defeated—27 to 30—the nays subsequently prevailing, and the bill was then taken up. Mr. Hoar, in the discussion on the bill, finished his remarks on the Pendleton amendment, providing that the bill should be held to exempt persons of less than twenty-five years of age from the penalties of the Edmunds act, and not covering persons, though he thought they should be. Mr. Call followed in a speech opposing the bill. Pending action to bring to the attention of the Senate a telegram of Governor Murray, the necessity of arranging for the final settlement of the Utah claims was explained by Mr. Call (Florida), and Mr. Williams reported a bill to prevent persons residing from holding office in the Territories—now serving as delegates to Congress. Mr. Williams made an argument in favor of the bill, calling on the Attorney-General to assist in the prosecution of cases. On the 17th the Senate adopted the Edmunds bill, which (among other things) will vacate the offices of registers and receivers, and Mr. Dawes's amendment limiting the number of Regents at seven at 200.

On the 5th Mr. Jackson introduced in the Senate a bill appropriating $10,000 to make good the damages done to the property of Lucius Fairchild, late Minister to Spain, in 1865, in the Methodist Book-house at Madrid. A resolution was also given for the necessaries for seven leading committees at $1,000 per year. The bill appropriating $50,000 to defray the expenses of the Electoral Commission was passed. The Pendleton amendment, providing that the future appointments to situations of Indian agency for the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory and the Commissioner of Indian affairs shall be filled from the list of persons who shall be found upon the examination held under the Civil-service rules, was adopted. The bill for the relief of Mrs. Anderson appropriating $10,000 to reimburse her for losses sustained by the burning of the steamer Lexington, was passed. It was passed by a unanimous vote. The bill to amend make and protect a penal offence—imprisonment for not more than two years—the polygamous offenders and the practice of polygamy were reported favorably. Mr. Burrows introduced a bill to establish a Bureau of Education, to consist of a Commissioner of Education, with a salary of $5,000, and a Deputy Commissioner, with a salary of $3,000, to be charged with the duty of collecting such statistics and facts as shall show the condition and progress of education in the several States and Territories, and to diffuse such information respecting the organization and management of schools and school systems and methods of teaching as shall aid the people of the United States in the establishment and maintenance of efficient school systems, and otherwise promote the cause of education throughout the country. The bill was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. Mr. Hoar introduced a bill to provide for the appointment of a Commissioner of Agriculture, with a salary of $5,000, and a Deputy Commissioner, with a salary of $3,000. The bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture. Mr. Hoar also introduced a bill to provide for the appointment of a Commissioner of Labor, with a salary of $5,000, and a Deputy Commissioner, with a salary of $3,000. The bill was referred to the Committee on Public Health and Quarantine.

In the Senate on the 16th Mr. Kellogg introduced a bill to appropriate $50,000 to erect buildings and other improvements in Louisiana. The House bill for the compromise was amended to the Lowell Deficiency bill by striking out the provision for the payment of $500,000 to the State of Louisiana, and inserting in lieu thereof a provision that the Secretary of War shall cause to be paid to the State of Louisiana the sum of $500,000 in the manner provided by the act of March 3, 1875, making appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi River. The bill was then passed. Mr. Anderson's amendment increasing the membership of the House for the next two years to 332, was lost—yeas 29, nays 31. The Senate bill granting a pension of $5,000 to Mrs. Garfield was passed.

MARY SKIDDER'S ADVENTURE

A Story of the Charlevoix Summer Resort.

BY W. L. CRAIG.

My name is not a romantic one. I am plain Mary Skidder, wife of Tom Skidder, who is head bookkeeper of the firm of Lunsmeng, ff & Co., hardware merchants, Detroit. Tom and I have been married six years. To me they have been six years of unalloyed happiness, with a single exception. That exception I will tell you about.

Tom is one of the most faithful helpers any business firm ever had. He is always early and late at his post, and is always the last to ask for a vacation. Lunsmeng duff & Co. are capable of appreciating such services, which I fear can not be truthfully, said of all our city merchants; so last summer, when as the heat was becoming daily more unendurable and Tom was growing pale and thin, the head of the firm sent for him one day, and said he must take a run in the country for a few weeks. It seemed like a god-send. Tom declared he would not go a step beyond the city limits, unless I or both him. It was just like him, dear, kind, thoughtful soul, and was the more commendable as so many husbands, after the honeymoon is over, are glad of a pretext for leaving their wives at home when going on a pleasure trip.

Where to go was now the important question. Tom had a friend in Kalamazoo, Bill Scoter, a young lawyer with few clients, but with large expectations of fame and fortune. Bill always managed to have his summer pleasure trip, so Tom told me. He had spent a season among the beautiful lakes and streams of the northwestern part of the Lower Peninsula, and in his letters to Tom was loud in his praises of that region as a summer resort. He was going there again, it certain contingencies, which Tom seemed to understand but which were not explained to me, made it advisable. Some of the Kalamazoo people had established a sort of summer colony there, in the village of Charlevoix. Bill would make his headquarters at that place, and he hoped to meet Tom there. And that is how it came to be finally settled that the Charlevoix Summer Resort was our destination.

I can not tell you all about our journey by rail to Traverse City, nor describe that lively little village, the metropolis of that region, nor the beautiful bay at the head of which it is situated, and river which we glided in a steamer one cloudless morning, as over a sea of liquid silver, on our way to Charlevoix. It will pay to take them in your route—the village and the bay—when you take your next summer's vacation.

The cloudless morning was followed by a lovely day. We reached Charlevoix just before noon. Being for a short distance up a narrow river and past a swing bridge, the steamer rounded at a wharf in the inner harbor. This harbor is a natural lake, lying wholly within the village limits. The river up which we came, has been deepened and widened, I believe, at government expense. Another channel has been cut from the harbor to Pine Lake, a beautiful sheet of water, stretching seven miles away among the forested hills of the interior.

If the day was lovely, the scene around us was enchanting. To us denizens of the sooty, sultry, pent up city, it seemed as if we had been transported to a very paradise. And I was so glad for Tom's sake. Already I could see the color in his face coming back to his cheeks, and his step was more elastic. It was a luxury to gaze on the bold, terraced shores, carpeted with green and dotted with white dwellings to watch the gaily painted boats, with their happy occupants, gliding hither and thither over the placid surface of the lake; to listen to the gleeful sounds of song and mirth, sometimes softened by distance, and the influence of the water to the sweetest melody; to inhale the pure, invigorating air, and lave the brow to be fanned by the balmy, soothing breeze—well, any description of mine would come far short of doing justice to the pleasant surroundings of our temporary home.

We were scarcely at the wharf, when a gentleman who knew Tom came along side with his boat, and kindly offered to row us across to the Resort the picturesque cottages of which could be seen on the other side of the harbor. Landings in a little cove, where numbers of fairy like boats, the counterparts of those we had seen upon the lake, were drawn up on the beach, we thanked our volunteer boatman, and walked up to the Resort hotel, the Belvidere House, arriving in time for dinner.

I wish I could fully describe the Resort, and the daily life of the visitors there, but the time and space allotted to me would fail. I can do no more than give them a passing notice.

The grounds, owned and controlled by a joint-stock company, contain several terraces, that rise one behind another with the regularity of the steps in a flight of stairs. You gaze on a long, scientific euphuism, which I didn't more than half understand, how these terraces were formed by the retiring waters of the lake, ages and ages before Adam was created. Whether Tom's theory is correct or not, the estimation is a very pretty one, and looks as if it had been made on purpose. It looks as if the hill-side had been pared down, moulded into pleasing curves, and cut into regular platforms with sharply defined boundaries, just on purpose to be covered with picturesque cottages, the abodes of intelligence, taste, and refinement. Around the harbor is seen the village, with its white buildings crawling down to the water's edge, its one church score pointing Heavenward, and a green curtain of trees in the background. In the opposite direction the eye rests upon the broad expanse of Pine Lake, bounded by the hills in the distance.

The resorters, as the inhabitants called them, were summer visitors, who usually remained only during the period of extreme heat. Some had rooms in the hotel, but several families occupied the cottages, a part of whom took their meals at the table d'hote. They were generally substantial citizens, moral, intelligent, refined, and remarkable for those physical and mental virtues that were in largely developed in the New England settlers, and that still appear, to a limited extent, as a conservative element in the characters of their more extensible and more reckless offspring. There were no balls at the Resort, and those hot coffee of fishing whose idea of the main business of life is a waltz and a flirtation by gas-light, in the small hours of the night, would have found life there exceedingly dull. Boating seemed to be the favorite recreation. It was not an uncommon thing to see three or four young girls, self-relying and skilful in the use of the oar, in a tiny boat of fashion outline, sailing fearlessly across the bay, down the river, and even out upon lake Michigan, when the swells from the lake meeting the strong current of the river created a commotion that to one unaccustomed to the water looked dangerous. Parties frequently went up Pine Lake, on the Gazelle and the Nellie, two small steamers that used to call for them at the little wharf in the morning and land them there again at night. The gentlemen organized fishing parties, which the more adventurous of the ladies sometimes joined, going for trout to the Boyne and the Jordan, and for perch and bass to several localities and so for many. On Sunday there was an afternoon service on the veranda of the hotel, conducted by some one of the ministers present, which was usually well attended, though if the truth be confessed, some of the boys and girls, not to mention people of mature age and experience, did not forget their boating, even on the sabbath.

On the whole, the company was a very pleasant one to associate with. Among the ladies there was one that excited my interest from the first. She was tall and lithe, a clear brunette, with liquid dark black eyes and raven tresses, the carriage of a queen and grace in every motion.

("Beautiful, isn't she?")

Such was Tom's remark, as Miss Wilderman moved away, soon after our introduction. I replied she was well enough as far as looks were concerned, but I make it a point not to encourage Tom's admiration of beautiful women. I should have thought more of it, had it not been for a circumstance that occurred a few hours afterward. Passing along the veranda, as I turned the corner, I came upon her and Tom in close conversation. That of itself was nothing, of course, but I missed an unusual light in her expressive face, and I thought I detected a flush on it, should be presumed to say. We would go up to Boyne City in a day or two, and enjoy many quiet hours together.

—OF—

—FOR SALE BY THE—

G. R. & I. R. R. Company

50,000 Acres in Charlevoix County

These lands are timbered with beech and maple, ash and other wood, and are accessible by land and by

WATER AND RAIL.

And are in a part of the State unequaled for fertility and healthfulness, and contiguous to the great fruit-belts, and to the fine cities of Lake Michigan.

NOT A WILDERNESS, BY ANY MEANS.

It contains a population of two thousand and fifty-two persons now and is rapidly filling up with settlers from almost every state in the Union.

Over 200,000 acres of the lands of this great belt already been sold.

Democratic Rebellion in Kentucky.

The Union Democrats of Kentucky, during all the years since the war, have occupied a humiliating and pitiable position. They have, of an enforced quiescence except to vote for the nominees of the Confederate Democracy. Thus have they stood for seventeen years, apparently apologizing for having opposed secession and stood by the Union. If a Union Democrat aspired to a nomination for office, he was sternly told to go back into the ranks and be thankful for the privilege of voting for some leader of Confederate guerrillas, or officer under Hood, Bragg or Johnston. When election day came around the party drill-masters were out in force whipping in Union Democrats to the support of Confederate Brigadiers and Colonels. They always succeeded. Meekly and submissively, the humbled voters who had been indicted enough to enlist in the Union army marched up to the polls and cheered for the candidates who gloried, during the war, in making life a burden to Union men. It was a strange spectacle. There was no division of offices between Confederate and Union Democrats. Such a proposition was hooted, although the latter party outnumbered the former two to one in the Union army was a disgrace and a discredit, and fatal to the aspirations of any soldier. On the contrary, the rank and achievements of a Confederate Democrat in success in killing Union men—was his greatest claim on a Democratic Convention, and it was always rewarded. This thing has gone on for seventeen years, simply because Confederate Democrats, as reservers, be found the Republican party of the State practically a thing of the past. It had no general organization worthy of the name, but few leaders who could be trusted, and it was destitute of money necessary to put the legitimate expenses of a campaign. Under the circumstances it was hardly to be wondered at that the Republicans were obliged to play second fiddle to the Bourbon Democrats, or that they were compelled to give all the honors to the Slide Democrats who had been their Democratic opponents. There was no other course open to them. They were compelled for their own salvation to do as they did. They submitted to the Read Democratic dictation with the skill acquired by long experience. It was one at last there is a prospect that this iron rule of the Confederate Democracy will be broken. A few Union Democrats have begun to assert their independence. They are tired of the abject and humiliating position in which they have so long been placed. They have waked up to the fact that it is not a life-long privilege to be ostracized by the Stars and Stripes during the rebellion. Whether they can be sovereign in their own party is not a question. They are determined to be. Any party or political organization continued with such by any cause could have authority of a party. The Democrats of the modern school who have been in control of the party for years, and who have had their own way under it, will doubtless, their utility, and who have placed themselves in positions to interfere with the operations that governs and directs the whole Republican party, will be astonished to find that they are of a small band of men who seem to have forgotten that the war of the rebellion was settled in Richmond. They have been educated under the yoke. They have protested that they were willing to be the Democracy of Jefferson, or Jackson, or Benton, or Douglas, to control, but they have never realized that they had not been left to organize, but only by year after year of Democratic victories, by financial operations the control for a time at all half-way Republicans.

This is a fair statement of the case. Jeff Davis' recent declaration that the Lost Cause was not dead, but sleeping, has created a sublimation as Mr. Tilden's. He predicted that the people of Democratic party would take advantage of being too previous. Why does he start his Presidential boom two years in advance?

Mr. Watterson rises to say that the "slaughter" is promised, in case the Democracy abandoned the Free Trade issue, "is all right and will arrive in schedule time." Yourselves will do well to climb a tree and hang out a banner signaling low.

Congressman Houk, of Tennessee, says the liberal movement in his State has a candidate as Mr. Tilden make the cheap mistake

Mr. Barnum has moved into the house recently occupied by A. Moore.

The snow has spoiled the sleighing in the lanes. The hens have enjoyed a great deal of the spare this winter.

We have been to busy we have had no time to over the improvements made somewhere throughout the town. Dean Scougale has built a new house on his land and has been occupying it all winter.

W. S. Baker speaks in the highest for the improvement he is making in the way of building land lately. He is putting up a large amount of hay this season.

First the plucky attempt of Archie then a shot from old Bowes home on evening by Warner and the attempt, shall we have made in our wonderful progress to tell what a shy cuss Irish is.

Washington's cone hundred and fortieth birth day was celebrated by a dance at C. H. Whitford's. We presume they had an enjoyable time, at least so on a par as last the next morning and they are honest thing which we interpreted any one would rather be than eat about a thousand cherry trees with a hatchet.

One of our Hayesites had occasion not long since to play the role of hired girl, which he did admirably and cheerfully and most lovely might he have continued to be, he had baked, when he discovered as an unusual amount of gloss used as powder for the sized loaf. He said he guessed he was entirely out of business at the present time.

The Northern Peninsula should nominate a Congressional district candidate. We know of no good reason for attaching any portion of the lower peninsula to that of the upper in the new plan. The upper peninsula has a commercial interest in ores and has no interest which distinguishes any interest below the straits. There have been strong arguments shown in the past in favor of sending upon sole State of the Northern peninsula. If there is any virtue in that idea there must be good sense in the idea of letting them have a Congressional District of their own. They have 100,000 population and increasing and should be treated not as a separate Congressional fashion.

Roscoe Conkling has been nominated by the President to succeed Justice of the Supreme Court.

Conkling has made previous mistakes, and has prominent contributional faults, but since the days of Daniel Webster the country has had few greater men. No one can question his legal ability. As a jurist he will be the peer of any of the associates on the bench, and will wear his ermine with dignity and credit.

This will permanently remove him from the political arena and send to bed forever in the party in New York. We are not certain that the appointment is not a wise one.

—Miss Fox returned home Friday from an extended visit. He visited Cedarville, Chicago, Milwaukee, and other cities during his absence.

—The ladies of the M. E. Church will hold an oyster social at the residence of Hon. E. H. Green, Wednesday evening of this week. A cordial invitation is extended to both young and old.

—M. Peck, Manager of the Standard Opera Company, is negotiating with Dr. Lasoo for his hall for a series of entertainments during the summer. The Company are now at Petoskey, and are well spoken of.

—It is enough to make a sympathetic outlaw weep to read the Record's account of the great deal who stole around in the vicinity of editor of the Petoskey Home and let him recuperate. Mother, and my poor head at same one of your size.

—Bellaire contains at present a wooden shoe manufactory, two saw mills, four planing mills, a shingle mill, three lath shingle mills, a sash, door and blind factory, a woolen mill, a furniture factory, a planing mill, three grist mills, a foundry, a fire-arming region, and will double in population in the next two years.

—The following officers were elected at the last meeting of the Charlevoix Orange Lodge:

W. M.—A. J. McLeod.
Dept. M.—Walter Meisner.
Secy.—[illegible].
Treas.—A. H. Cipriotti.
Cond.—G. W. Avery.
Tiler.—Harry Rogers.

—Miss Alice Carpenter sang a solo at a recent concert at the Evanston Conservatory of music, receiving in unmeasured terms both from the college faculty and the public. Miss Carpenter is to sing at a coming concert there, and also will appear in concert duet with one of the musical professors. Her friends hope we will be glad to learn of her success.

—Dr. M. L. Leitch, of this place, is receiving notes extensively in the interior of the northern region especially hearing upon the settlement of Beaver Island and its vicinity by the Mormons. His conclusion is in substance enough that a region which is conducive a history of the region in which forms. He would be the useful to mankind for others for any one wanting the information given.

—Odell Leland of the Sault ste. Herald, says: the legislature as [illegible] and reports was "King Strang" was there, and on a visit. "We knew Strang 12 well, and know that he was a fickle [illegible] and has often been pointed to be. As a legislator he was vigilant, careful and just, and some of the best laws of these days were made by his pen and influence. In politics he was a Democrat, as all Mormons do are, but if that church never developed worse men than Strang their sins will be well found them not [illegible] time day."

—The severe struggle is now going on in the community in opposition to Congress, over the division of the $12,000,000 for the different harbor improvements of the country. If this was anything new, we might feel some alarm, but it is only a repetition of what occurs every session, and will terminate with the usual percentage of appropriations.

—The Petoskey members in calling town out to a council of the most stupid nonsense. Mr. McIntyre at his examination [illegible] that he was in Canada at the time McCulloch alleged the murder to have been committed. McCulloch himself was examined before Justice Call on Thursday, and his case was discharged for lack of evidence. This looks into thin air what proved to be a first class murder trial, and the press are outrightously defrauded at a most prolific, and exciting topic for the entertainment their readers.

—Take a walk up Main street to the proposed park, when you have leisure, between then and election day, and examine the grounds before you vote against the proposition to purchase them for a public park. The village could not make a wiser move than purchase this plot, and expend a moderate sum annually for its improvement. It can be made a source of pride to us and those who come after us.

—Mr. Thomas Sykes, Capt. Aldrich that the Fairbanks Oil and Rapids will resume their route on the Bay, April 1st.

—The following are the newly elected officers of the Charlevoix Good Templars Lodge:

W. C. T.—Robert O'Neill.
W. V. T.—Mrs. Nettie Hancock.
W. Sec.—Harry Nicholls.
W. A. Sec.—Miss Allie Fuller.
Treas.—Miss Bessie Nesbitt.
W. F. Sec.—Hon. McNeill.
W. M.—A. E. Mason.
W. D. M.—Miss Hattie Boak.
Chap.—H. F. Bisbee.
W. I. G.—Miss Celia Nicholls.
W. O. G.—Mossie Lewis.

—The Common Council submitted to the voters of the village, at the coming election, the question of the purchase or [illegible] acres of land lying at the west end of Main street, for a public park. The land is owned by James Fox, and is, during the summer season a favorite [illegible] to resort for our people. It is undoubtedly enough to be romantic is covered with natural evergreens, and overlooks lake Michigan. The amount to be voted upon for purchase the land and improve it to a limited extent. Inasmuch as it is proposed to [illegible] we hardly see several years time for tax will [illegible] be burdensome, and we are heartily in favor of this being carried. These grounds are capable of being made a source of pride for Charlevoix in future years. Vote yes on the proposition.

—It is now believed that the new proposed railroad through Otsego ought to make Charlevoix the terminus. Thus the route via Mesaukee county, Ke Bushis, Bellaire, would be the most feasible, and secure a larger business than any other, is worthy of consideration.—Kalkaskian.

All that is necessary to convince the most biased person, that Charlevoix is the point at which to terminate that railroad, is a little investigation. The road would come through a better country, number more towns on its route, and have for its terminus the best harbor on the shore, besides connecting with the growing trade of Pine Lake with its extensive navigable coast. Its close contiguity to the south shore than any of the other proposed routes is also a most important factor in the matter. We are pleased to see our neighbors stirring up the matter.

South Arm Items.

The snow is almost all gone, consequent lumbering is rather slim.

The house of Ben Delong was recently burned to the ground. It was a frame building, so the loss was no immense. Upon it [illegible] the house he lives was insured.

It is rumored that we are to have a wagon shop on the west side of the Arm.

A party came from Columbus, Ohio, last summer to this place, and commenced trade in the best and that business.

The Rev. J. M. Smith has been somewhat intrepid of late, so much so as to induce him to go fishing his appointments.

The champion haul of logs this season was drawn by Albert O'Brien, with the Wood team, of Charlevoix—the load weighed 4,330 lbs.

Jeff. Wicker is building an addition to his hotel. When completed, will make one of the finest houses in the county.

A couple of South Armers, rather fresh on the mormon question, recently drove to the residence of John Hackett and informed the Elder they wanted to be [illegible]. The Elder inquired his species took down the book of "Mormon" and after the usual and customary process, Jos. Rockwell and Miss Agnes Gregg were made one. (Which is the one?)

D. B. Bromagham and family have gone to St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., on a visit. He also hopes to regain his health, which is somewhat impaired.

Wm. Lowrey is delighted with his young daughter.

The [illegible] proves to be an unmitigated fit between the [illegible] and Perry factions, over the U. S. Steamship.

VILLAGE CAUCUS.

There will be a Union Caucus at Town Hall, in the village, on Saturday evening, March 11, 1882, at 7:30 p. m., for the purpose of nominating village officers for the ensuing year.

By Order of Committee

Marine News.

—Dan. McNeill came as a boatman on the propeller Paxton this season.

—P. S. Brown has been employed as engineer of the tug Payne for this season.

—Moeller & Christy have purchased the propeller Lady Washington, and will put her on Green Bay.

—Capt. L. Gebo has purchased a half interest in the arrow Supply, and will sail her this season. Christie Gebo goes as mate.

—The tug Payne is in process of repair at Washburn ship yard. She is having her bow and stern raised, and otherwise improved.

—M. J. Stockman has purchased S. M. Sye's interest in the propeller Nellie Bonch. Mel. Thompson will command her this season, but her route has not been fully decided upon.

—Capt. H. G. Edwards has been appointed to command the Iron Company's tug Hibbard, Capt. Dick Williams, it is reported, is to step into Capt. Rossman's boats, ashore.

—The propellers Champlain and Lawrence have been overhauled and put in first-class shape for the season's business. They will make Upright, Emery & Co's dock their headquarters at this port.

—Capt. Gedman, of the schooner Bertie Calkins, has purchased the propeller Truedell, and will run her on the route between Ironton and Escanaba, in the place of the City of New York, this season. She is being overhauled and repaired. Captain Gedman will sail her.

—The Detroit Evening News, commenting on Mr. Beckus' article on Strang in the last number of Harpers, says: Mrs. Bedford, wife of one of the men who shot Strang, is still living on Beaver Island, on a fine property left her by her husband. The News is mistaken. Mrs. Bedford has for some time past been a resident of Charlevoix. The error however, is of little importance as compared with the many errors in the article of Mr. Beckus. Had Mr. Beckus taken the pains, he could have made a less [illegible] more elaborate article and avoided many errors by interviewing several of our citizens, who were active participants in the Mormon troubles, both on the Granite and Mormon side.

—Projected railroads to Grand Traverse are very plentiful these days. The latest is from Logan sport, Ind., an extension of the Vandalia.—Traverse Bay Eagle. All right neighbor, we are interested. Traverse City will not be the terminus of any of them.—Petoskey Record. Perhaps not, neighbor, but Charlevoix will. Have you ever thought of that?—Charlevoix Sentinel. Never did before, and probably never shall again.—Petoskey Record.

Well, kind friend. There are several years in store for both of us, if virtuous conduct characterizes your daily walk.—Before your red locks begin to change their color, you will have reason to change your mind on this question. Charlevoix will have a railroad before Petoskey gets her breakwater. Cut this out and [illegible] it in your scrap book. Petoskey never would have had a railroad if the conditions of the land grant had not made it compulsory on the Company to terminate it there. It never had any natural advantages, and never will. If Charlevoix gets a railroad it will be because of its superior natural [illegible]. Jot this down also.

—Traverse City correspondent of the Detroit Free Press:—It may be of interest to give the matrimonial history of "King" Strang, the Mormon leader at Beaver Island, in connection with reminiscences which have lately appeared in print. Strang's first and eldest wife and her two children returned to her friends at Fon du Lac, Wis., after the break up at Beaver Island. The second wife died on the Island, where her child, a daughter, remained, and is now the wife of a fisherman. The third wife lived for some years at Mackinac. Her son went to Albion College and is now a multi-dle minister in Wisconsin. Strang's fourth and [illegible] wife was very young and handsome. When the family was broken up she came to this country, and was soon after married to a very worthy farmer. They have lived here and prospered for many years, and have four sons and one daughter, and are all of the highest respectability. The eldest member is still good looking, and comparatively few are aware of the fact that she was the children wife of "King" Strang.

MR. BLAIR presented a petition in the Senate on the 23d, in behalf of the Indiana tribe, of 307 souls, one hundred thousand dollars of whose fund had gained absolute appeals. Mr. Pugh moved to use the proceeds of the sale of the Indians placed on a republican reservation in Kansas, which was more properly a democratic State, and was agreed to. Mr. Pugh, succeeding to the duties of Mr. Wigfall, on the Committee on Territories, in Mr. McMillan, to act against a portion of Montana being ceded to Canada, and to pay back to Kansas pecuniary aid. Mr. Pugh, in behalf of Mr. Wigfall, said that the granting of territory to foreign powers ought to be prohibited, and that the power ought to be exercised only by the people of the United States, after several ratifications were obtained. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Territories. The House was not in session on the 23d. Adjourned to the 26th. In the House, on the 24th, a bill was introduced to authorize the Postmaster-General to issue postage stamps of the denomination of 1 cent, with the portrait of Franklin thereon, and to issue stamps of the denomination of 2 cents, with the portrait of Washington thereon. The House refused to suspend the rules and pass a resolution declaring that the Secretary of War be directed to withdraw the order of the Secretary of War to General Scott, ordering the latter to Harper's Ferry

Congressional.

MR. DAWES presented a petition in the Senate asking that, on behalf of the Indians, it be ordained that one hundred thousand ounces of unstamped gold deposited with Mr. HUNTINGTON be sent to the relatives of the Government officers who were murdered by the Piutes in the Pyramid Lake war. Not only the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers, but several small streams were bounding. Memphis, Tenn., and Helena, Ark., were particularly under water, and refugees from the Lower Mississippi country arrived that yesterday were under water, and many cattle, sheep and large numbers had been drowned. In many parts of Illinois, Indiana and Missouri crops had swollen to unusual proportions, and were destroyed in many cases and consequent abandonment of farms. In Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin and Michigan a terrible snow storm prevailed, and much loss ensued.

Mr. Schurz, of Missouri, offered a resolution declaring that the Government should not be run by a ring, and appropriating $10,000 to investigate the charges against Mr. GRANT and his Cabinet. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Pratt, of Indiana, introduced a bill to prohibit the importation of foreign paupers, criminals and convicts, and providing for their return to the country from which they came. The bill was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. Sherman, from the Committee on Finance, reported back the House bill to provide for the payment of the interest on the public debt, and for the redemption, purchase and exchange thereof, with an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a substitute. The substitute provides that the interest on the bonds of the United States shall hereafter be paid at the office of the Assistant Treasurer of the United States in the city of New York, and that the interest on bonds of the United States now payable at the Treasury of the United States shall be paid at the office of the Assistant Treasurer of the United States in the city of New York. The substitute was agreed to, and the bill passed

MARY BEDDOE'S ADVENTURE.

A Story of the Charlevoix Summer Resort.

BY M. L. LEACH.

[CONCLUDED.]

Perhaps I ought to explain that the Boyne, one of the most notable trout streams of the country, comes in at the head of Pine Lake, fourteen miles from Charlevoix. Three miles north is situated the thriving little village of Boyne City. Horton's creek is a smaller stream, nine miles further north, falling into the lake on the north side, at Hudson's Bay, where there is a wharf, a sawmill, and a thriving settlement.

Guarding Miss Beddoe's absent prevailing a long and a parole, she entered the matter to her husband, who undertook to manage it. The result was a bargain with Ed Stubble, one of the most turbulent, cantankerous and unreasonably at all the men in the lake following the rod-rig of guide and boat man. Ed was to furnish a boat, which was to be carried on the Gazelle to the landing at Horton's Bay, to use which power we would go down as passengers, to where I pleased, for I took care to have Ed understand that I was the sole master for and commander of the expedition.—When, on Wednesday morning, the two lady friends whom I had invited arrived passed me to the little steamer, we found him, with his boat on board, standing on the wharf, ready to relieve us of our gear because lunch basket and our large bundles of shawls and blankets.

I should like to tell you all about our trip up Pine Lake that bright, I may say sweet morning, and about our successful fishing in Horton's creek and what a fine lot of "speckled beauties" we caught, and about the experience of camping at night in a sunny, sandy bay, but I must hasten to the end of sleeping on a bed of fragrant hemlock twigs, but I must hasten to the end of my story. When you see us tormented as to reward a reporter at Charlevoix, don't fail to go through the refreshening experience yourself, not forgetting the camping out and the sleeping on the bed of twigs. I will give you one piece of life and the memory of it will be pleasant to the end of your days.

Thursday morning I ordered camp to be broken up at an early hour, privately giving instructions to Ed to row us along the shore to Boyne City, timing it so as to arrive there an hour later than the steamer from Charlevoix. Ed was faithful to his duty. We met the steamer a mile from the wharf coming out, as we were going in. At the White House, a small hotel standing on the very margin of the river just above its mouth—you can almost step from the veranda into your boat—I learned, what I had anticipated, that a lady answering to the description of Miss Wilderman, who had come from the steamer had immediately gone up the river, in a boat that had apparently been waiting for her. She appeared to be alone, the head lady said, from whom I obtained the information. I now proposed that we should go as far up the river as we could easily row, and fish for trout as we leisurely floated down. The plan seemed to please my lady friends, and I was glad to find that, though Ed had already had a hard pull of it, the proposal met with no hearty approval.

Going up the Boyne was a new experience. I had never seen anything like it. The resident in the city, whose experiences have not extended beyond the refinements of civilization, can have no conception of the society, the wildness, and the beauty of the scenes continually opening to view. Every mile or so I pulled the oars. We passed through a little lake, in which were floating large beams of square timber that had been rafted down the stream, intended for a foreign market. Then we passed between low banks, covered with a rank growth of such plants as delight in a soil saturated with moisture, beyond which on either side appeared a dense, dark forest. As we advanced, the natural meadows grew more grassy and the banks somewhat higher, and finally the dark evergreens drew crowded close down to the water's edge. The river narrow and crooked, and turbulent became narrower, and crookeder and more turbulent still, and we met with rocks and sunken logs, around and among which the crystal, sparkling water lashed and foamed, and then subsided again in many whirlpools to the music of the merry laughter, as if exultingly joyful at being permitted to start on its future journey another course, from which, pure as its parentage, it had long ceased to stray and soil. Ed found it necessary to lay aside the oars and take a strong setting pole. Standing in the stern of the boat, he would place the lower end of the pole on the bottom of the river, or against a sunken log or a projection of the bank, and by a powerful steady push drive the boat up against the current. How he ever managed to steer clear of obstructions and prevent the boat from being whirled about and dashed against the bank, was more than I could understand, but he kept steadily onward, although prudent, and apparently without haste, slowly crawling up the stream.

Coming to a reach of the river where for a little distance the current was somewhat smoother and less rapid, Ed was able to relax his efforts in a measure, though it still required constant labor to prevent losing ground. Suddenly he called our attention to an object just ahead. It proved to be a log canoe, or "dug out," lashed to the painted roof of an overhanging cedar. A little way off, a blue smoke was seen curling up among the trees. Ed recognized the canoe as one belonging to an Indian friend of his, and presuming that the owner was camped where the smoke was seen, he proposed that we should go on shore and see how Indians sometimes live in the woods. Pushing the boat close up to the roots of the cedar, he held it steady while we seemed carefully crawled out upon the bank. Under Ed's guidance, my companions started for the camp, but I pleaded fatigue, and sat down a short distance from the boat. I knew the game I was after was still above us, and from the character and navigable nature of the river I thought it could not be far off. Though I had kept up the appearance of cheerfulness, and even gaiety, I was thoroughly wretched. What I would do when I overtook Tom and—and then some, I couldn't tell. I had no plan except the general one of finding them and somehow breaking up and punishing their insolence. And what then would I do though all the long, weary, miserable years of the remainder of life! The question was as of fearful import. I bowed my head upon my hands and tried to think, but only one thought would come to me—that of ruin, unutterable, irretrievable ruin.

I don't know how long I sat in that half torpid state, vainly trying to gather my thoughts to some sort of order, probably not many minutes. Something caused me to look up. There was a boat on the river, and in the boat were Tom and Miss Wilderman. Tom was not rowing, but was sitting by the side of his companion, with an arm gently encircling her form, while the boat floated down the reach of comparatively quiet water, unguided except by the influence of the current.—Their faces were turned in the opposite direction, evidently I had not been seen. Obeying the impulse of the moment, I ran down to the river, lowered the log canoe from its mooring, spurned quickly into it, and pushed it off into the stream. When I was a young girl on my father's new farm, on the border of a beautiful lake, in one of the counties of the interior I had learned to manage a canoe, and my skill served me now to good purpose. I took advantage of the current, which here was strongest in the middle of the channel, and propelled it silently and swiftly, almost with wings, steady strokes of the paddle, taking care not to make any sound by striking the paddle against the canoe, or splashing the water. The boat was approaching the rapids below. I noticed that it was gradually swinging round across the stream. At last it fully faced it, evidently that projected above the water, quite rocky brink of a rapid. The current was the cause of my approach, and seemed wholly indifferent to the situation, so absorbed were they in the happiness of each other's society. The boat swung round, so as to present the side with toward me. Muttering to desperation, I suddenly turned the prow of my canoe them down, and, if possible, drown them both. All the energies of mind and body were immediately concentrated on this effort to carry out my purpose. It seemed as if I had been suddenly endowed with the strength of a giant. The canoe shot forward with the swiftness of an arrow. It was within reach of the coming boat. I pushed my remaining strength into the last stroke of the paddle. It struck the boat amidships. The force was exerted as if it had been an egg-shell, and I rushed partly over, throwing as many pounds headlong into the water. There was a cry of terror from the lady, which was quickly smothered by the submerging boat. The gentleman seized his first opponent one for an instant, as he was going over—it was not Tom.

The canoe swung clear of the wreck, and floated swiftly down the rapids. I looked back and saw the gentleman rising to the surface, with Miss Wilderman in his arms. Again his face was turned toward me; I could not be mistaken, it was not Tom. I watched him for half a minute struggling with his burden towards the shore, and then a bend in the river hid them from view. The excitement of the broken paddle remaining in my hands was useless for guiding the canoe, even if I had been thoughtful enough to try to use it, but I could think of nothing, only that he man with Miss Wilderman was not Tom. There had been some great mistake. Tom was true to his vow. A strong gust of misery had suddenly fallen on my shoulders. I believe in my sudden despair I made the woods ring with a hysterical laugh, as I repeated to myself "It wasn't Tom, it wasn't Tom."

At length the canoe was driven against the bank, and I had more enough remaining to secure the branch of an alder and hold fast. I don't know how long I remained there, the memory of the whole

Charlevoix Sentinel.

CHARLEVOIX, MARCH 7, 1882.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Roscoe Conkling has been nominated by the U. S. Senate, as Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

Another attempt has been made to assassinate the Queen of England. On the 2d as the Queen was entering her carriage to drive from the railroad station to Windsor Castle, a miserable looking man took deliberate aim with a pistol and fired. She was unhurt and drove to the castle. The man, who is a lunatic, was arrested and followed to the police station by a vast crowd.

The Senate Committee on Appointment have reported a bill which makes the Tenth Congressional District from the counties of Muskegon, Newaygo, Mecosta, Oscoda, Lake, Oceana, Mason, Manistee, Wexford, Grand Traverse, Leelanau, Antrim, Charlevoix and Manitou. The bill makes the Eleventh District of the Upper Peninsula intact. There is no doubt that both Houses will pass the bill as recommended.

The scheme recommended by the Tax Commission, which would compel the counties to carry delinquent taxes, will not be adopted. The House has adopted a resolution that the tax commission shall prepare a measure that all taxes now charged up against the counties by the State should be suspended, the lands so held sold for what they would bring, the titles thereto be made good by the State, and the sum received, be it more or less, be taken by the State in complete liquidation of all claims arising from unpaid taxes from the respective counties. The commission, it is understood, will prepare a separate measure embodying this Law, and it is believed that it will be adopted.

The average attendance at Lakeview school for the month ending March 3d, was 26. Present every day—Willie H. Chew, Morris R. Chew, Charles W. Scudder, Lucinda M. Scudder, Willie C. Arnold, and James H. Arnold.

Mr. Sayres received his letter last week about which there has been considerable commotion. The P. O. C. in Petoskey had tried his head at the foot act business and drew a good sized Mossback cutting a log of wood into, or the envelope, and asked the query "Is this the thing that runs?" Ouh this and no hog-mote.

We were one of a pleasant party that assembled at S. Webster on the 22 of March to celebrate the 15 anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Webster's marriage. Nearly all their married life has been spent in this country they having come here in the fall following their marriage. As we listened to the recitals of toil and adversaries of the pioneers of those early days as related by Mr. Pierce, Mr. Cooper and Mr. Webster who were among the first to settle in the primeval fastness of our much loved county, we thought all honor is due to those sturdy men and women who formed the germ of what is destined to be one of the most prosperous portions of our commonwealth. The gathering will long be remembered by those present as an "Oasis in the desert of life." Every one was joyous as a marriage bell.

The collation was not ostentatious, and as epicure could only exclaim "What more could I ask?" The presents of china and crystal were useful and ornamental and may many more anniversaries return to Mr. and Mrs. Webster.

Retirement of General Grant.

From the Lansing Republican.

The spirit of criticism is manifested in some quarters over the passage of a bill by the U. S. Senate to restore Gen. Grant to the army, and place him on the retired list with the same pay as is now drawn by Gen. Sherman. It is said by the opponents of the bill that "Gen. Grant has had the highest honors in the gift of the American people, and should be satisfied. His restoration to the army does not come from a civil point of view, however well he may have performed the public duties entrusted to his care, but for distinguished military services alone. Whatever merit there is in the bill must stand on that ground and none other. At the time the people called him to the Presidency, he had to give up the honors and pay of a life position, for an office of four or eight years, in which most incumbents have spent all the income derived therefrom. The plain statement of fact leads to the inquiry as to how Gen. Grant reached so high a point in military fame? The principal events of the great rebellion have many times been stated, but memory is treacherous, and a brief allusion to the grand achievements of Gen. Grant, which made him the foremost soldier of his generation and worthy to rank with the great captains of history, will not be out of place.

Entirely unknown to public men at the breaking out of the rebellion, his superior knowledge of military matters and skill in the organization of troops for the field, brought him a brigadier general's commission before September, 1861. Placed in command of the district of southern Missouri, with headquarters at Cairo, on Sept. 6, without orders, he seized Paducah, at the mouth of the Tennessee, which commanded the navigation back of that stream and the Ohio. This masterly stroke saved Kentucky to the Union, for the state legislature, which had until then affected to be neutral, at once declared in favor of the Union.

Early in November following he fought the battle of Belmont with 3,000 men against 7,000 confederates. His loss was 485, against 642, while he carried off two pieces of the enemy's artillery and captured 200 prisoners.

Then came the seige of Donelson, the first union victory of any magnitude; and at that time unequaled in the annals of military achievements. With an army of but 15,000 men, which was finally increased to 21,000, he besieged a considerate force of 21,000 men, in what was supposed to be an impregnable position. He began hard fighting on Feb. 12, continued it for three successive days, then carried by assault the key to the works. On the 16th the confederate army of 14,623 soldiers surrendered "unconditionally," with 65 cannon, and 17,000 small arms. About 4,000 of the enemy escaped in the night, while 2,500 were killed and wounded. Grant's loss was less than 2,000.—As a result of this victory Kentucky and Tennessee fell into the national Lands while the navigation of the Tennessee, Cumberland, and Mississippi rivers was opened for hundreds of miles.

For this he was made a major general. His indomitable courage, skill, and tenacity wrung victory from disaster against overwhelming numbers on the bloody field of Shiloh. It was also his strategy which brought the rebels out of their fortified front at Corinth and luka to fight his soldiers on ground of his own choosing, at a time when he was prepared.

Then came Vicksburg, "the Gibraltar of America." On April 30, with an army of 43,000 he was at Brunsburg, about 30 miles south of Vicksburg. He had two armies opposed to him, one of 54,000 men in Pemberton, at Vicksburg, and Joe Johnston with a smaller but rapidly increasing force at Jackson. The plain narrative of his brilliant operations as that he at once abandoned all communication with the river, and pushed into the interior between the two hostile armies. On May 1, he met and defeated a portion of Pemberton's command at Port Gibson. Turning eastward on the 12th he destroyed a force coming out of Jackson to succ him. On the 14th he captured Jackson and scattered Johnston's army. Returning to the Mississippi on the 16th he utterly routed Pemberton's entire force at Champion's hill. On the 17th he again beat the enemy at Black river bridge. On the 18th he had Pemberton cooped up in Vicksburg. On July 4th, the place surrendered with 31,600 men and 172 cannon, at that time the largest capture of men and material ever made in war. To obtain this result he fought five battles, made two assaults, and prosecuted a seige for 47 days and nights. The grand summing up of this campaign and siege was that he had taken prisoners, killed or wounded over 60,000 rebel soldiers, and captured 240 cannon. His own loss in the same time was 1,243 killed, 7,095 wounded, and 535 missing, making a total of 8,873. Of the wounded, more than one-half returned to duty immediately.

In November he was sent to take command of the beleaguered army of the Cumberland, whose position had been the theme of Chattanooga from Sept 21. The battles of Lookout mountain on Nov. 24, and the heroic charge of Mission Ridge on the following day form the brightest military chapters in American history.—The setting sun on the evening of Nov. 24 saw Braxtin Bragg with his rebel hands flung from what he supposed an impregnable position, leaving over 8,000 prisoners and 40 cannon in the hands of General Grant.

During the last year of the war, after he was made lieutenant general, he captured 66,512 rebel soldiers, besides the killed and wounded. With forces not one quarter larger than those of his antagonists, and in spite of the enormous advantages afforded the enemy in fighting on the defensive behind organized lines of earthworks, he accomplished military results that for completeness are without precedent.

These brilliant services, never eclipsed by any of the world's greatest warriors, were rendered at a time when the life of the nation hung trembling in the balance, and we candid, conservative Americans can rightfully say a word against the politicians and hacks which he has so justly earned.

Per less honor so far crowns the English government, lauded the duke of Wellington with the titles of marquis, earl and duke, repeatedly sent him to parliament, made him premier, foreign secretary, chief secretary of Ireland, chancellor of England, governor of Dover, and constituted the British army until death. In the way of pecuniary consideration after the Paris war compliment he received $1,000,000, his prize money at the battle of Waterloo was $350,000, he was given an estate valued at $1,000,000, and a pension of $20,000 per annum, which descended to his family. England's lavish example ought not to be followed by the great republic, but the people of this country would be ungrateful to do less than restore General Grant to his old position and retire him from active service.

Rev. Dr. Talmage of Brooklyn has pre-empted a field challenge to the great infidel. In his last sunday morning sermon he said that he had learned that Col. Ingersoll's mother was a good christian woman and that he did not like the Westminster catechism nor the Shorter catechism. "Well sir," continued the preacher, "he will answer a question from Talmage's catechism. How did religion seem to agree with his mother? Did it make her kind and loving and patient? Did it give her comfort in the day of trouble?—Was she deluded to the last? He is said to be a brave man. I dare him to take his mother's Bible on some Sunday afternoon and go into his room and lock the door, and kneel down and read the fourteenth chapter of John."

Last week through bad road reading several errors crept into Mr. Henderson's editorials. In the article "Attacks on the Governor," in the third paragraph from the bottom the word "like" in fourth line should be "as." In article "Whig or Republican, which?" in the third line from the bottom the word "evidence" should be "evidently." Next, in the article on "No. 'Grand River and Harbor Convention,'" three or four lines above the resolutions passed, for "House of Representatives" read "Whigs of Massachusetts." Ben commences to read and revise his own sarcastic humorist and thus prevent the occurrence of such vexatious errors.—Negaunee Journal.

The only wonder to us is, how in God's name Ben Henderson's manuscript can be put in type, if it is any thing like his correspondence. But then, the compositor can be forgiven for the last named error mentioned in the above extract. "House of Representatives" and "Whigs of Massachusetts" look so near alike on paper that the error is quite natural. Ben Henderson against the world on bad writing. Ben like his great prototype, Greeley, he is a Colossus of Rhodes in intellect.

The Pole dance that the Louis Standard (Dem.) raised over the Yorktown centennial celebration has about died off. Although a half-dozen Republican newspapers resolved the silly charges, we will say the to credit of the Detroit Free Press and the Lansing Journal that those ridiculous charges were given no currency or countenance through the columns of those papers. Judge Boynton, the political editor of the Free Press, was at Yorktown, and indignantly denounces the idle rumors which have been invented against Gov. Jerome, originating, as that paper asserts, in fictional rather than political hostility. This is about the same position taken by the Lansing Journal, the central organ of the Democracy from all blame in the matter.

Michigan stands first among the states in the growth and manufacture of lumber, first in salt, first in copper, second in iron, first in its fresh-water fisheries and fourth in wheat. It has the largest copper mine and the largest iron mine in the world. It was here in this grand and beautiful state that the Republican party—the great party that freed the slave and saved the Union—was formed. She is not only great in her resources but is surrounded by the greatest fresh-water lakes in the world.—No other state has a greater future before it than our own noble Michigan, which is so famed for the enlightenment of her people as for the magnificence of her internal resources, her streams and her shore.

In the Senate Mr. Beck introduced a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to move tattoos for the relief of the following chiefs in the country overflowed by the Mississippi. After a vehement debate, it appropriated $100,000 to be spent in search for the relief of the suffering.

The Manistee lumber and shingle mills cut 228,825,752 feet of lumber and 920,845,000 shingles last year, an increase of ten million feet of lumber and two million shingles over 1880. The shingle product reduced to best mixed lumber would equal 103,163,458, making the total log cut during the year 228,287,210 feet. Twenty-four million laths and 173,000 pickets were sawed in 1881.

The cottage which President Arthur has rented at Long Branch is on Ocean Avenue, opposite the palace of Hollenden Park. The cottage and the furniture throughout is the most costly and comfortable manner, and will cost on all of the modern improvements.

A train of cars drawn by oxen is reported from the overflow by the Mississippi Valley, where many cows have been lost, as the loss of live stock and farming implements has already been considerable. The outlook for the immediate future is very critical.

A Salt lake City, Utah, dispatch says sixteen Jewish converts of Mormonism Peniuers to Chicago to-day. All are refugees from persecution and other causes having recently joined to escape from the young flood of anti-Mormon feeling in the Nation.

Never has California shown such activity in planting orchards and vineyards. Raisin making is on the highest level. Oranges fast loss, nuts are in vast. Fruit canning is multiply, and pick up every time apple.

At the recent Presidential election the total number votes cast in the State was 166,000, and it thereby elected become a state in that time, the number would be 401. The North would have 251, and the South 153.

The crew of a wrecked British bark, consisting of the captain, his wife and two children, and two seamen, were rescued from an open boat off the coast of California by the steamer Newburn. They were starving.

The Grant retirement bill passed in the Senate by a vote of 35 to 17. It authorizes the President to nominate Gen. U. S. Grant to the army, and to place him on the retired list with the pay of a General.

It is a favorable symptom that Garfield, as a curiosity no longer interests. He sits in his cell and grumbles because no one comes to see him. It is a good sign that the people are coming to their senses.

Secretary Hunt in his report said 103,000 rations to be sent from St. Louis for the benefit of the sufferers from the overflow in Mississippi and Arkansas.

Dr. Boynton, one of the attendants on the late President Garfield, has gone to Kansas for the purpose of engaging in sheep raising.

A Gloucester, Mass, dispatch announces the probable wreck of three schooners on that port, involving a loss of fifty lives.

Ex-Secretary Hulburd's Eulogy on the Murdered President Delivered in the National Capitol at Washington, February 27.

MR. PRESIDENT: For the second time in this year, since the good deacon began to call the roll of the dead Senators, I am called by the Hall of Representatives to do honor to the memory of a departed President, which I feel the less of a mandate, as I am unable to pay the tribute of mine heart. The original condemnation of his great life-work has subsided in the heathen darkness and ignorance which had marked as signal honors attributed of the Divine Spirit. Time and wisdom is a ratio of years, when treason has been executed to its reality, and when all are not blind but have learned from the past.

Whether God in wrath or love has permitted this assassination of our President, we are not able to know. But, upon such examples we look to find lessons for us, but we know not in what the age is to be told in existence. In his day and generation he was a man of the people, and in the hearts of the people, which has found the period and place of his birth, and his name and fame will be the property of the people, and their children for all time. The foreign mission of his youth was the beginning of his official life, and the first step in the line of promotion which finally led him to the Presidency. The foreign mission was a school of experience, and with a youthful ardor, his heart and mind were open to receive and to appropriate the lessons of wisdom which were taught in the school of travel. He was a close observer of men and things, and he was a student of the institutions of the countries which he visited, and of the causes which led to their establishment and to their overthrow. He was a student of the history of the people, and of the causes which led to their greatness or to their downfall. He was a student of the principles of government, and of the causes which led to the success or to the failure of governments. He was a student of the religion of the people, and of the influence of religion upon their character and upon their institutions. He was a student of the causes which led to the moral and material prosperity of the people, and of the causes which led to their poverty and to their degradation. He was a student of the influence of the family relation upon the character of the people, and upon the institutions of the country. He was a student of the influence of the habits of the people upon their character and upon their institutions. He was a student of the influence of the habits of the people upon their character and upon their institutions. He was a student of the influence of the habits of the people upon their character and upon their institutions

CHARLEVOIX, MARCH 11, 1882.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Items from Hayes-By Gum.

Miss Jarman closed her winter term of school at Cadmus last Wednesday. The patrons of the school are well pleased with her work in the school room and she is retained for the summer school.

By the courtesy of the editor, we have had the use of his Congressional Directory the past week and have learned a great deal in regard to the Civil Service that we were hitherto ignorant of.

The pole reporter has a hard time of it. He is not present to read proof and correct it by copy, and the result is, if the compositor after cussing us for bad, and going through various gyrations in order to decipher manuscript that ought to be read as easily as Greek or Hebrew, and then eliminate a letter, or a whole sentence or rule a letter, or a word here and there in it so that he is making matters plain (all of which you know is a part of the profession) some people, without going back to the printers cause, pitch into the reporter and abuse him, as if he made a million or two out of the transaction and does not feel bad enough already.

Why doesn't some great rag publication go about it and have the northern headquarters of Arctic and Charlevoix connection straight-Detroit Journal.

The township of Hayes would be greatly inconvenienced in case the north centre line of Charlevoix county, and would oppose such a movement to the butter end. If the eastern line of the county should be extended south to a point east of the head of Little Traverse Bay, thence west to the bay, making the bay the northern boundary of Charlevoix county, we would "acknowledge" We could then build county buildings after the manner of Noah's ark, and have them anchored a portion of the year at Boyne City, a portion at Charlevoix, and the rest of the time at Petoskey, thus all three of the cities could be made happy, and we think we have struck the solution of the problem of the county seat question.

We enjoyed the exhibition at Undine last Wednesday evening. The schoolhouse being too small, the entertainment was held at Ed. Burdick's residence. The declamations, dialogues &c., were rendered in good style, and the seeing in some of the names could scarcely be understood, especially in the California Uncle Courting Under Difficulties. The Seven Stages of Life, extending from childhood to old age in seven acts, and Jack of the Beanstalk in fact all did well, and the music was delightful.

Our Bones Letter.

We have had a little sleighing during the past week, but for the last three weeks there was a painful dearth of news.

The sugar season opened auspiciously the last week, and closed suddenly, the first part of the present week. H. W. Beach made nearly 40 gallons of syrup the first run.

The fox enthused and pest harrass is about past and the winter rifled, and Wm. Flanigan's crop will stand about three 5,000 posts, 500 cords of wood and 15,000 ties.

Diphtheria in our town has about disappeared. There was but one death out of ten cases.

Mrs. Clara Marshall and children has returned to Painesville, Ohio, with her brother, Mr. Carlton Howhall, who spent the winter here.

Mr. E. B. Marshall closed his school a little before the expiration of his term, on account of diphtheria.

Miss Kate Wrigley's school, at Antrim closed on Saturday last, and gave an exhibition last Wednesday evening in the new mill of Mr. Aver's, which was seated with rising seats, and a good stage with curtains provided. Miss Wrigley's school acquitted itself splendidly, and with a little outside help, the exhibition was a success.

Miss Gertie Johnson, who has been going to school here for a year, Miss Wrigley, returns to her home, nine miles north of Harbor Springs, next Tuesday. She has gained many friends here, who regret her leaving.

A sleigh was carried off the premises of Hiram Sweet, last Tuesday evening. The men who carried it off, were tracked to the home of the Quigleys, where the pursuits succeeded in covering their tracks so successfully, that the officers were baffled on the premises, was completely baffled. We offer a reward of fifty cents for the station, providing it is recently dressed.

Just received at S. G. Isaman's new store, at South Arm, $1,000 worth of ready made clothing, and a fine line of men's hats, for which I will sell way down for ready cash. Also will sell at very low rates blankets, to close out at cost. I sell sugar at cost, and kerosene oil at 15 cents per gal. Try some of that prepared mince meat at 10 cents per pound.

Norwood Notes.

The saw mill was started up last week, to saw lumber for repairing the dock. The edger and new saws will come by first boat, and then it will be a full force will be put on.

Gettis & Neal have bought about 300 acres of land of O. D. Wood, on Sec. 23, and are making a road to it. They will get out logs, and lumber from there this summer.

A pound social was held in the school house on Friday evening last for the benefit of the minister, Mr. Kelley. The receipts were about twenty-five dollars.

There will be an effort made to build a church in Norwood the present season, and the prospect is that it will be successful.

PSYCHE ANN.

Sergeant Mason, who shot at Guiteau has been sentenced to be dishonorably dismissed from the service, and a term of eight years in the penitentiary. The sentence is thought to be too severe and an effort will be made to induce the president to pardon him.

BREVITIES.

—U. S. Signal service commenced March 1st.

—Senator Bowers now resides and votes in Otsego.

—D. H. Bartholomew returned Monday from a visit to Lake Superior.

—John McNeil has removed to his recently purchased farm in Marion.

—Regular communication of Charlevoix Lodge, F. & A. M., next Tuesday evening March 28.

—The Haven Band of Boyne City, assisted by the Ross School House on Saturday, April 15.

—The work laid out to Lancaster has been completed as a village, to be known hereafter as St. Ignatius.

—Hon. Samuel Train, Judge of Probate of Otsego county, was in town Thursday on Probate business.

—Supt. John F. Morris was the purchaser of Mr. Bartlett's quarters interest in the Lumbering mill and four lots.

—Regular church services in Hayes Corners and Ironton alternately. Sunday School at Ironton every Sunday at 2 P. M.

—The work laid out to Lancaster has been completed as a village, to be known hereafter as St. Ignatius.

—Hon. Samuel Train, Judge of Probate of Otsego county, was in town Thursday on Probate business.

—Supt. John F. Morris was the purchaser of Mr. Bartlett's quarters interest in the Lumbering mill and four lots.

—Regular church services in Hayes Corners and Ironton alternately. Sunday School at Ironton every Sunday at 2 P. M.

—Rev. Mr. Davies, pastor the Banks Congregational church, returned from his eastern trip, which took in Boston and other cities. Mr. Davies went in quest of aid for the erection of the Banks Church, and met with much encouragement in the way of funds. Enough has been raised to complete the church—about $1,000—and the work will go on rapidly to its completion. We congratulate our Banks friends on the prospect of having a neat and commodious place of worship.

—About half past eight o'clock Friday evening, J. M. Clerk entered his office after some thing he had left, when he discovered the room full of smoke. He soon discovered that the floor near the stove was on fire and making rapid headway. A hole was burned in the floor through which the stove leg had fallen, and the stove tipped over. The fire was extinguished without trouble, but as it occurred during the severe gale then blowing, his call at the office was a timely one for the good of Bridge street.

—The sash and door factory is now conducted in its fullest capacity. During the winter much time and money has been expended in improvement and addition of new machinery, while many conveniences have been added, which makes the establishment a model one. Many more improvements and additions are contemplated, and the proprietors are bound to keep in advance of the demand for their class of work rather than fall behind it. Charlevoix has reason to be proud of the institution.

—The Natonic body in the United States has done well by the brethern in the horned district of Michigan. A. M. Clerk, of Lexington, the almoner of Masonic relief, has distributed nearly $2,000 in cash. Every superior Mason in the burnt district, who lost his home and was left destitute by that terrible calamity, has received from this fund $200—those who lost crops but saved their dwellings have received all the way from $20 to $100 each, according to their losses and needs. Relief has been given to upwards of 150 masons.

—Rev. G. Daniels sermon Sunday evening was a marked relief from the stereotyped form of sermons with which Methodist pulpits are so prolific now-a-days. It was a practical presentation of truths which effect society in every day life, and it was listened to with rapt attention by a large congregation. His subject was the tendency of men and women to fret and chafe over the ills of life—many of them imaginary—and to count their troubles greater than those of their neighbors. The sermon gave us and others much food for thought.

—We had the pleasure recently of a visit to Dixon & Taylor's forcing house, on Mr. Dixon's farm, in this corporation. The house is constructed on the conservatory plan, black heat conductors passing around the sides, over which are tables, with several inches of rich soil. In the centre is also a similar bed of soil, and the room is so arranged as to keep the air at a proper temperature at all times. In connection with this, outside, are extensive hot beds, for hoeing early vegetables. The proprietors are preparing to increase the number of these beds, and propose also to have a garden or two acres, which will be devoted to the raising of all kinds of "garden sass" adaptable to the climate, not required to be forced. Mr. Taylor, who has a half interest in the establishment, has had many years experience as a gardener, both in England and this country, and the enterprise cannot fail to be a success. The establishment will be known as the "Lakeside Garden."

—Reports come swilled in as now and then, that the pit is boiling on a railroad to Charlevoix via South Arm and Ironton. We genuinely love it from an officer of the G. R. & I. R. R. and a promoter of the scheme, that such a road is only a matter of a very few years, and that he should recommend it to the company. He regarded it as the most feasible route, and one which gave promise of more profit than any yet talked of. He also stated to us that he regarded Charlevoix as the best natural harbor for a railroad on this shore. It is an open secret that the G. R. & I. folks have one eye on this part of the kingdom and the other on the operations of other companies. It is also well understood that two roads are preparing for a campaign in this general direction. When the Lake Shore road moves northward to Traverse City or the Grand road science shapes itself more fully, you may expect to hear a rumble from the direction of Macinaw. We get this from more in a shape to know whereof they speak. Imagine railroad from the latter place, through the pine forests of the upper Jordan, starting at the head of the Arm with its promising village and extensive lumber interests, another at Ironton with its large manufactory, and a terminus at Charlevoix, with its magnificent harbor and close contiguity to the north shore—a railroad in it," and railroad men know it.

—The Boyne City Standard, of last week, has a fallaciously profound article on the county seat question. The thread of its argument is spun from the same spool that has encircled the bobbin since their campaign commenced—central location. There are many good reasons why the county seat should remain where it is for the present. The geographical boundaries of this county are known to be far from satisfactory to the people, and five years hence will not find it as it now exists. There are grave necessities for a change, and knowing this, Boyne City people are constantly haunted by a ghost which, in convincing tones, tells them that Boyne City may not always be centrally located—that they must sooner or later yield the honor to some other hamlet in our fair county. Hence their desperation to strike while the later seem propitious. Antrim county wants the township of Whitewater, in Grand Traverse county, and the people of that Township are, like Barkis "willin," Banks wants to come over the line into Charlevoix county, and will when Antrim county gets Whitewater. So which change the elements are said to be favorable. Emmet county wants the south halfsher of Townships of this county, the people of which are willing and anxious to go. When Bank comes in, they go too. Then where will be the center of Charlevoix county? Not Boyne City! There are other villages in Charlevoix county that would make as good county seats as Boyne City. Charlevoix is every year becoming more accessible from all points in the county, and in all probability ere long a railroad will traverse from Traverse City to Petoskey through the county, bringing distant Townships into direct communications with Charlevoix. They know this at the head of Pine Lake, and know that if they don't get the county seat now they never will get it! Some may sneer at the question of expense, in the moving of the county seat, but it is well worth considering. Should the vote be in favor of moving the county seat, the people may be prepared to submit to taxation for the purpose of erecting expensive county buildings; for next in importance to the removal of a county seat is the question of keeping it, and, with probable changes in our boundaries threatening them, the Supervisors favorable of Boyne City, being a majority, would hasten to anchor the county seat against freebots. No one questions the fact that this county can go along yet many years without any considerable expenditure for public buildings. Grand Traverse county has none; neither has Emmet, and the county business of either dogdoes cure. Therefore, whatever may be said to the contrary, whoever votes for the removal of the county seat, votes heavy taxes upon himself, at a time when every spare dollar is needed to improve new homes, and secure the necessities of life. Ten years hence, no burden would be entailed by removal, but now, the people are not ready for it, and we are confident will reject the proposition. But should they not, the earth will continue its diurnal rotation upon its axis, and its annual revolution around the sun; the stars will continue to shed their effulgent rays; the seasons will follow each other with regularity; Charlevoix people will continue to live, move and have their being, and Boyne City people will continue to kill muskallon, drink poor whiskey, and watch the procession moving from Boyne Falls to Charlevoix. But puffins don't outlaws.

The Kalamazoo Daily Gazette is stirring up the republican state central committee to call the next State Convention in that village.

Sayings from Hayes—By Oisk.

Miss Jameson closed her winter term of school at Ludlow last Wednesday. The patrons of the school are well pleased with her work in the school room and she is retained for the summer school.

By the courtesy of the oiler, we have had the use of his "Congressional Directory" the past week and have learned a great deal in regard to the Civil Service that we were hitherto ignorant of.

The poor reporter has a hard time of it. He is now pleased to read proof and correct it by copy, and the result is, if the compositor after stamping on his head, and going through various gyrations in order to clear his brain so that he ought to be read as easily as Greek or Hebrew, and then eliminate a letter, or a whole sentence or substitute a letter, or a word here and there in he may thus be making matters plain (all of which you know is a part of the profession) some people, without going back to the primary cause, pitch into the reporter and abuse him, as if he made a million in two out of the transaction and does not feel bad enough already.

Why doesn't some great big politician go about it and have the sentence loaned my lines of Antrim and Charlevoix county straightened.—Friendly Reader.

The township of Hayes would be greatly improved in appearance by straightening the south line of this county, and a number of us oppose such a movement to the latter end. If the census in favor of the county should be extended north to a point east of the head of Little Traverse Bay, thence westerly to the bay, making the bay the northern boundary of Charlevoix county, we would "subside." We could then hold county buildings after the similitude of Noah's ark, and have three anchored a portion of the year at Boyne City, a portion at Charlevoix, and the rest of the time at Petoskey, then all three of the cities could be made happy, and we think we have struck the solution of the problem of the county seat question.

We enjoyed the exhibition at Ludlow last Wednesday evening. The scholars have being too small, the exercises were built on Ed Bartlett's soubrette. The declamations, dialogues &c., were conferred in good style, and the acting in some of the scenes could scarcely be surpassed especially in the California Uncle Country. Under Difficulties, The Seven Steps of Life extending from childhood to old age, in rotten rags, and Jack of the Hedge-side, in fact all did well, and the music was delightful.

Our Banks Letter.

We have had a little sleighing during the past week, but for the last three weeks there was a pound of thanks of snow.

The sugar season opened auspiciously last week, and closed suddenly the first part of the present week. H. W. Hemmeter nearly 10 gallons of syrup the first run.

The tie, cordwood and post harvest is about over and the winter cutting and Wm Flanagan's crop will amount about then 5,000 posts, 500 cords of wood and 15,000 ties.

Diphtheria in our town has about disappeared. There was but one death out the ten cases.

Mrs. Clara Marshall and children has returned to Painesville, Ohio, with her brother, Mr Carlton Bowhall, who spent the winter here.

Mr. E. B. Marshall closed his school a little before the expiration of his term, on account of diphtheria.

Miss Kate Wrigley's school, at Antrim closed on Saturday last, and gave an exhibition last Wednesday evening in the new hall of Mr Dyer's, which was crowded with rising seats, and a good stage with curtains provided. Miss Wrigley's school acquitted itself admirably, and with a little outside help, the exhibition was a success.

Miss Bertie Johnson, who has been going to school here to her aunt, Miss Wrigley, returns to her home, nine miles north of Harbor Springs, next Tuesday. She has gained many friends here, who regret her leaving.

A sheep was carried off the premises of Hiram Sweet, last Tuesday evening. The men who carried it off, were tracked to the home of the Quigleys, where the tracks succeeded in entering their tracks no more, carefully, that the officer who searched the premises, was completely baffled. We offer a reward of fifty cents for the mutton, providing it is decently dressed.

Just received at S. G. Isaman's new store, a small Arm, $1,000 worth of ready made clothing, and a fine line of men's hats, for which I will sell way down for ready cash. Also will sell over coats and blankets, to close out at cost. I sell sugar at cost, and kerosene oil at 15 cents per gal. Try some of that prepared mince meat at 10 cents per pound.

Norwood Notes.

The saw mill was started up last week, to saw lumber for repairing the dock.—The edger and new vash will soon be finished, and early in April a full force will be put on.

Gaskin & Nash have bought about 200 acres of land of O. D. Wood, on Sec. 23, and are making a road to it. They will get out ties, and lumber from there this summer.

A pound social was held at the school house on Friday evening last for the benefit of the teacher, Mr. Keeler. The receipts were about twenty five dollars.

There will be an effort made to build a church in Norwood the present season, and the prospect is that it will be successful.

PENDA ASH.

Sargeant Mastin, who shot at Gustine, has been sentenced to be dishonorably dismissed from the the service, and a term of eight years in the penitentiary. The sentence is thought to be too severe and an effort will be made to induce the president to pardon him.

In the Senate on the 7th Mr. Spooner, from the Judiciary committee, reported an original bill for the correction of errors in the laws of the United States. Mr. McMillan presented a memorial from the Iowa Legislature asking for $2,000,000 for the improvement of the Des Moines River. Mr. Platt presented a petition from citizens of Connecticut, praying for the investigation of charges of collusion between the Secretary of War and the Sugar Trust, and that the Secretary be removed from office. When the Chinese bill came up, Mr. Perkins, from the committee on foreign relations, moved an amendment to the bill providing that the Chinese exclusion act should not be construed to prevent the transportation in bond through the United States of Chinese subjects who are not laborers, and who are destined to some foreign country. The amendment was agreed to, and the bill was passed. Mr. Hoar introduced a joint resolution appropriating $10,000 to enable the Secretary of State to procure a statue of Roger Williams, to be placed in the National Capitol. The resolution was referred to the committee on the library. Mr. Hoar also introduced a bill for the relief of Mrs. Marshall, widow of Gen. Marshall, providing that she be allowed a pension of $50 per month. Mr. Hoar explained that Gen. Marshall was killed in the battle of the Wilderness, and that his widow was left in destitute circumstances. The bill was referred to the committee on pensions. In the House a resolution was introduced by Mr. Bynum, of Indiana, calling on the President for information relative to the recent seizure of the American schooner Adams by the Canadian authorities. Mr. Bynum explained that the Adams was seized while fishing in Canadian waters, and that the vessel was released on the payment of $1,000. Mr. Bynum said that the Adams was not fishing in Canadian waters, and that the seizure was a high-handed outrage. Mr. Dingley, from the committee on ways and means, reported a bill to amend the customs administrative act of June 10, 1890. Mr. Dingley explained that the bill was intended to correct certain errors in the act of June 10, 1890, and to make it more effective. The bill was passed. Mr. Dingley, from the committee on ways and means, reported a bill to amend the act of June 10, 1890, in relation to the importation of tobacco

FLOODED!

Some Accounts of the Wide-Spread Devastation Caused by the Overflow of the Mississippi River—Disheartening Condition of Many Sections of Country.

A RIVERTON (Miss.) special of the 9th to the Helena, Ark. Chronicle Tribune, says:

From the scene of desolation I write you by night, the feed and hasty report. I can gather of the true situation. Riverton is a small place of four or five families known, and about twenty refugees. Rosedale is two miles above, and is about the same size. The people of both places are of Bolivar County, Miss., and the home of the Hon. Mr. Chalmers. The town is under water, and at o'clock Tuesday morning, and the crevasse is now 300 yards long and growing all the time. The alarm was given by Dr. Dutsee, who rowed ten miles in a rough boat to arouse his neighbors. Every one acted with a will, and it was impossible to pull a boat through, and the people took shelter upon the houses and trees floating pieces of fences, sides of buildings, etc.

I was about an hour before Rosedale was flooded and the people there had time to save some of their stock and a great deal more valuable of their light personal property. As soon as possible the boat collected the refugees and took the wharf-boat at Terrene, where a temporary shelter was found, the men staying by their property. Yesterday morning the people possessed except away by the torrent of angry water. Many cattle were drowned in the water, and many more lost in the inaccessible vicinity of Riverton.

It is a gloomy subject to think of—what must become of the people who are now houseless and without food, and it is even more dark to think of what can be done to help them in the future. The people are unable to repair the damage, and unless the Government comes to the rescue they must all flee, and there is no need to paint an scene. The time is short, and something must be done. The country is going to produce a pound of cotton or more per acre this season. This is the first year of the Bank of England advocated the free coinage of silver.

Mr. Gladstone said the 8th states that nine Europeans, journeying from Tunis to Gabes, have been officially reported as victims of the locust plague.

The Methodist Episcopal Church recently met in the offices of the Methodist Book Concern, in the city of New York, and the Rev. Edmund de Schweinitz was elected Secretary of the Church Extension Society. Bishop Andrews presided. Bishop Foss and Bishop Hurst were also present. The Rev. Many people were drowned, and the rest are in a destitute condition. The entire town of Wellborn, Arkansas County, is also a total loss. Here reports the entire country between the Grand Prairie County a vast sheet of water, and hundreds of people without food, and no way to get it. Schroeder, postmaster at Saint's Landing, Chicot County, says that the crevasse at Lake Providence is 1,000 feet wide and 25 feet deep, and is said to be a terrible scene of destruction. He says the people of the eastern portion of Chicot County have abandoned their houses and their crops, and have taken refuge on the levees. Bradleigh Bothbell in the British Empire Review.

The following details are published concerning the late Bradleigh Bothbell in the British House of Commons:

While the result of the division on Mr. Labouchere's motion was being made known Mr. Bradleigh rose from the seat which he occupied on the cross-bench below the bar and advanced rapidly to the table. In one hand he carried a large roll of paper, and in the other a decanter. Before he was two miles above, and is about the same size. The letter place is the residence of Bolivar County, Miss., and the home of the Hon. Mr. Chalmers. The town is under water, and at o'clock Tuesday morning, and the crevasse is now 300 yards long and growing all the time. The alarm was given by Dr. Dutsee, who rowed ten miles in a rough boat to arouse his neighbors. Every one acted with a will, and it was impossible to pull a boat through, and the people took shelter upon the houses and trees floating pieces of fences, sides of buildings, etc.

I was about an hour before Rosedale was flooded and the people there had time to save some of their stock and a great deal more valuable of their light personal property. As soon as possible the boat collected the refugees and took the wharf-boat at Terrene, where a temporary shelter was found, the men staying by their property. Yesterday morning the people possessed except away by the torrent of angry water. Many cattle were drowned in the water, and many more lost in the inaccessible vicinity of Riverton.

It is a gloomy subject to think of—what must become of the people who are now houseless and without food, and it is even more dark to think of what can be done to help them in the future. The people are unable to repair the damage, and unless the Government comes to the rescue they must all flee, and there is no need to paint an scene. The time is short, and something must be done. The country is going to produce a pound of cotton or more per acre this season. This is the first year of the Bank of England advocated the free coinage of silver.

LANSING, March 15, 1882.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Before we summarize by counties the several Congressional Districts of the state, on the Congressional vote in both,

First District,—County of Wayne.

Second District,—Monroe, Lenawee, Hillsdale, Washtenaw.

Third District,—Barry, Branch, Calhoun, Eaton, Jackson.

Fourth District,—Berrien, Cass, Kalamazoo, St. Joseph, Van Buren.

Fifth District,—Allegan, Kent, Ionia, Ottawa.

Sixth District,—Clinton, Genesee, Ingham, Livingston, Oakland.

Seventh District,—Huron, Lapeer, Macomb, Sanilac, St. Clair.

Eighth District,—Shiawassee, Saginaw, Gratiot, Montcalm, Isabella, Midland.

Ninth District,—Bay, Genesee, Oceana, Newaygo, Mecosta, Osceola, Lake, Mason, Manistee, Wexford, Kalkaska, Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet.

Tenth District,—Tuscola, Huron, Sanilac, Clare, Roscommon, Ogemaw, Iosco, Crawford, Oscoda, Alcona, Alpena, Montmorency, Otsego, Presque Isle, Cheboygan, Emmet.

Eleventh District,—Grand Traverse, Leelanaw, Benzie, Manistee, Mackinac, Chippewa, Schoolcraft, Delta, Menominee, Marquette, Houghton, Ontonagon, Keweenaw, Isle Royal, Ontonagon.

All of the present Republican members, nine in all, are candidates for re-election, and a spirited contest will be made for the nomination in the new Ninth and Tenth Districts.

Among the candidates favorably mentioned in the Ninth District, are the Hon. Archibald Bellars, state Senator from your district, Hon. Byron M. Cutcheon, Hon. William B. Ambler, Judge Michael Brown, of the more northern portion of the district with Hon. William M. Harriman, Hon. Charles D. Nelson, Hon. David McLaughlin, James H. Campbell, Hon. Henry H. Hutt, of Muskegon.

For the Tenth District, Hon. Charles F. Gibson, state Senator from this county, B. W. Hauser and Representative Granger, of Tuscola county; Henry M. Loss, of Oscoda, and O. E. M. Cutcheon, of Iosco county.

In the Lake Superior and Grand Traverse (the new eleventh) District the candidates mentioned will be Jay A. Hubbell and J. H. Chandler, of Houghton; the Hon. Edward Breitung, of Marquette county, Samuel M. Stephenson, of Menominee and Henry W. Seymore, of Chippewa, and perhaps some others in the upper peninsula, with the Hon. Seth C. Moffat, of Grand Traverse.

The contest for state officers has begun rather early this year on account, perhaps, of the assemblage of the Legislature.

There will be no question of the nomination of Governor Jerome and Lieutenant Governor Crosby, who will doubtless be renominated by acclamation.

For the office of Secretary, the candidates will be the Hon. Harry A. Conant, of Monroe; William Crosby, of Emmet, and perhaps Mr. Jenney, the present incumbent.

For the office of Auditor General, Mr. Latimer will doubtless have a clear field. He is deservedly a popular man.

The same may be said of Gen. Pringle and for State Treasurer, provided he assents to have his name used, but we understand the General declines a third term. The Hon. Frazier H. Stanton, State Senator from the Ionia district, will doubtless be renominated, although there is a Detroit candidate, Mr. Grosse. Either name will hardly be contested.

For the office of Commissioner of the State Land office, the name of A. B. Copley, of Van Buren county, is named notwithstanding many think that the present Commissioner, the Hon. J. W. Nemeskill, will be renominated.

It is understood that Attorney General Van Riper will be a candidate for Congress in Berrien place, from the Fourth District, and will not be a candidate for re-election.

The Legislature to be chosen next fall, will have a U. S. Senator to choose. It is generally conceded that Mr. Ferry, our present able and faithful member, will be his own successor. His great service to the material wealth and interest of the State are unexcelled by any of his illustrious predecessors and are well worthy of recognition by his constituents, ever attentive to all his duties in the public councils in both houses of Congress. During his service as Senator he was chosen six times as president pro tem. of the Senate, the last time without a nomination by the opposition, and that too after the exciting events succeeding upon the presidential event, March 2, 1877. Those compliments were deserved recognitions of Mr. Ferry's impartiality and fairness as a presiding officer of the most august legislative body of our nation.

Mr. Ferry, during his long term of service in Congress, has occupied some of the most important committee positions, and is at present chairman of the committee on post offices and post-roads, and a member of such of the important committees on finance and foreign relations. He is second on the vital political questions of the day, to that of the Republican party. He has been for years an earnest champion of river and harbor improvements, protection to American labor, honest money, and free national banking. He was a member of the committee that drew up the resumption act, while he expended the refunding of the national debt at a less percentage of interest. He has never been connected with any corrupt schemes of interest while in Congress. No investigations ever damage so far to his integrity, politically or financially. The Republicans of Michigan are proud of Mr. Ferry and propose to keep him in Congress for another term, and thereby attest their appreciation of his patient and pure as a practical manner. He is in full vigor of his manhood, being only 61 years of age. He is affable and agreeable in his manners and genial in his social intercourse, just such a Senator as Michigan wants in Congress, a scholarly and accomplished gentleman, a tried and true patriot, that is why the people of Michigan want him sent back to the Senate.

He has enemies, so did the Christian Zachy Chandler. But they have been true previous, as the saying is, to their method of attack upon Mr. Ferry. Their unwarrantable accusations of the gloomy political record that Senator can do him no harm, but still recoil upon their authors.

VETERANS OF MCMINNS.

Gen. J. B. Fox, who commanded a division at the second battle of Bull Run, recently read a carefully prepared paper before the army and navy society of Kalamazoo, in which he makes strong grounds against the reinstatement of Fitz John Porter. He skillfully holds that the newly discovered evidence coming nothing to overthrow or modify the judgement of the court-martial of 1862; that as large if not increases the conclusiveness of guilt; the evidence before the court-martial of 1862 was more reliable than that before the advisory board of 1878; that the new evidence from confederate sources, which is original and was entirely unknown with the events is in support of the conclusion of facts found by the court-martial; that even if Porter were right as to Longstreet's arrival and position on the field, the judgement of the court-martial would be invalid on military principles. He is careful analysis of all the disputed points at the time order were given and received, and the time of Porter's movements and Longstreet's arrival, &c., &c., &c., shows that Porter had no excuse for disobeying Pope's orders, and that he had a clear road to have marched his troops to the battle-field he been so inclined. In the opinion of Gen. Cox the restoration of Porter to citizenship would be ungenerous. But in vindication a triumph, to recall his conduct as the model of chivalry and excellent soldiership, to entitle him from the public treasury, to restore him to his rank; to retire him on pay ten times as great as the pension your maimed and crippled comrades of similar grade are receiving, is to dishonor every one who paid his own and into the struggle for his country. However honored may be the names which support it, it is our solemn duty to say, under your leadership we did not so learn the art of war." A brave Michigan soldier, who belonged to Kearney's division, and knew the exact position of Porter's troops at the commencement of the battle of Bull Run, in conversation with the editor of the Republican last Tuesday, showed conclusively that there was no earthly reason why Porter should not have been on the ground in time to aid Pope in leaving back the rebel hordes which finally overwhelmed him. The court-martial which tried Fitz John Porter knew more about this case than any other set of men ever can know, and their judgment and action should remain undisturbed.—Lansing Republican.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Report of the Auditor-General.

From the recent report of Auditor-General Latimer, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1880, the following interesting statistics are taken:

Taxes are paid from the State Treasury during the year for the support of the insane $130,014. Of this amount $7,000 was paid for the support of permanent insane; $1,443 for the support of non-resident insane; $1,425 for the support of insane soldiers, and $6,310 for the support of criminal insane. From the receipts of the various asylums and prisons and from other data the number of insane who should be provided for in such institutions is stated at 2,250. The annual increase of insane persons in the State is about 150 per annum. Thereare 1,091 now under treatment in the asylums.

The salaries of public officials during the year amounted to $40,145. The expenses of the Judicial Department were $91,764, expenses of the Legislature, $105,671, against $91,111 during the year 1879. The amount paid for Township Library purposes was $6,000. The institutions $8,870, costs of suits $5,967, Treasury fees $2,895, contingent expenses $4,000, State Prison, $4,726, in State Reform School $4,000, in Soldiers' Home $11,041, remaining officers of State $4,000, Public School $9,743, paying for premium of bonds $2,000. The expenditures for the year for State debt were $98,675. The amount charged to the benefit of Board of State Auditors' account was $1,000.

The net receipts from direct taxes during the year were $830,458. The amount of specific taxes was $1,000. The amount of taxes collected by the State Treasurer was $830,458. At this amount there improvements companies paid $1,277; railroad companies, $60,477; insurance companies, $85,000; bank companies, $26,425; express companies, $1,629; telegraph companies, $1,000; mutual insurance companies, $1,000; mining companies, $6,425; freight, shipping and passenger companies, $1,705. The balance of $630,145 collected was $87,564.

The balance in the Treasury September 30, 1881 was $1,258,000. Of this amount $1,185,490 belonged to primary, and the amount of this balance was applicable for payment and beyond the reach of the State for the ordinary expenses of government, only $1,000,000 being $385,767 for the payment of November and January interest on the bonded debt, of which the former and November matured prior to the fiscal year and the latter in March 1, 1882. The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad paid into the treasury $1,000 of specific taxes, and the Michigan Central Railroad Company $1,000 of similar taxes collected was $87,564.

THE MICHIGAN LEGISLATURE.

The Extra Session.

SENATE.—On the 5th the entire day was devoted to consideration of the Tax Commission bill to constitute of the Whole.

HOUSE.—Bills passed—relative to the superintendent of the Board of control of the State Reform School; appropriating $200,000 to rebuild the north wing of the Reform school; repealing the act of February, 1881, providing for the construction of insane asylums; amending sections fixed fees of $2,000 relating to the closing out of all State Tax bonds. The Senate Preemption bill for the internal charters passed without material amendment.

SENATE.—On the 8th the Committee of the Whole on the Tax Commission bill was adopted and placed in the order of third reading. The House amendments to the Incorporation Act bill were concurred in.

HOUSE.—Bills passed—repealing the specific tax on street railways; repealing all laws relative to the mandatory assessment of property. The Senate Preemption bill was generally amended and passed. The one-mile having commenced in the amendment the Homestead law exemption of Dunbarness.

SENATE.—On the 9th the Tax bill was passed, with a few unimportant amendments, and referred to the Judicial for engrossment. The Incorporation Act bill was also amended and passed. The one-mile having commenced in the amendment the Homestead law exemption of Dunbarness.

HOUSE.—The Senate amendments to the Tax bill and the Supplementary Tax bill were concurred in. The Senate amendments were concurred with—giving the State Military Board the board's action for the annual encampment of the 2nd Regiment and Subsidiary Corps; improvement companies, $1,277; railroad companies, $60,477; insurance companies, $85,000; bank companies, $26,425; express companies, $1,629; telegraph companies, $1,000; mutual insurance companies, $1,000; mining companies, $6,425; freight, shipping and passenger companies, $1,705. ALL SORTS.

—"What is meant by the pomps and vanities of this world?" asked the Sunday-school teacher. "Them flowers on your bunnet, Jemima," replied the quick-witted scholar.—N. Y. Post.

—Dr. Richardson, of London, recommends electricity as "a painless death" for fowls. The disagreeable hornpipe usually danced by every chicken in a row as it loses its head has long been a source of disturbance to celibate minds.—Cincinnati Saturday Journal.

—"Oh, for the good old times," quoth Jones. "When I was a boy I was always served Queen Anne's buttered red Spitz. And I was content and glad." In those hard times my loving wife Is daily begging for a loaf To put upon her back."—Indianapolis Sentinel.

—Oysters are appetizing cooked in this way: Drain them as dry as possible, then put them in a hot saucepan or spider, on the stove. As they begin to cook add a piece of butter, pepper and salt. Serve on thin slices of buttered bread, or as a garnish on the platter for a side dish or lunch.—N. Y. Post.

—A wedding occurred at Amagansett, L. I., recently, which was attended with a novel feature. The bride was Miss Lizzie Ferguson, teacher of the village school, and twenty little girls acted as bridesmaids. The parties had not seen each other for forty-four years, nor saw each other for forty-four years, nor had communicated all this time. When they separated forty-four years ago the bride was six years old and the groom sixteen.

—A problem, but it be remembered, is one thing to be done not discussed. We have been talking about Mormonism these many years. It is time to stop talking and go to work. Utah has been "dynamited" so far as words can do it. Quite a number of times and in an eminent polygamy throws. If the surviving "two rules" is to be extirpated, let us have a swift decision upon the best weapons, and a vigorous use of them.—Christian Union.

—A bill has passed the Kentucky Senate unanimously providing that all railroad companies now in existence, or hereafter to be formed, shall, within four years from the passage of the act, fence in their roads against cattle and stock of all kinds with cattle-guards at farm crossings. Damages equal to the full value of the property injured or destroyed, in case of failure to so build, may be recovered by owners of cattle killed or injured; and the owners are made liable in the road for damages resulting if they leave cattle or other stock on the right of way belonging to the road.

—"Yes, this is the Australian electric boy," said the showman at the museum in New York, the other day, pointing to a youth of twenty years, who was on exhibition in one of the upper halls of the building. The visitor bowed the head of the boy and immediately dropped it, as he felt a tingling sensation permeating his entire body. Content with my part of the boy's body gave the same sensation. One explanation offered for the phenomenon is that electricity, which exists to a greater or less extent in nearly everybody, has been abnormally developed in this boy. His name is John Naughton, and, although called the "Australian electric boy," his birthplace is given as Ireland.

—A bill to create a new department of agriculture has been introduced in the United States House of Representatives. The head of the department, it is explained, "shall consist of the collection and publishing of useful statistics and other information concerning agriculture," etc. That's right. What this country is yearning for with more soulful yearnings than Oscar Wilde yearns for the hollow sunflower, is more "pubdocs." In the shape of Agricultural Reports. An Agricultural Report is "within and drink" to the economical constituent who doesn't subscribe for enough journals to keep him in shaving paper.—Norristown Herald.

The Kentucky Anti-Bourbon Revolt.

The revolt of the Kentucky "Union Democrats" against the Bourbons is even a more significant turn in Southern politics than the recent Malone revolt in Virginia. While the latter was an uprising against Bourbonism, it was based upon a dispute with West Virginia that of readjustment of the old State debt. The Kentucky revolt is an open mutiny in the camp, not upon any side issue, but against the pretentious and oppressions of the ex-rebels for seventeen years inflicted upon them for their feeble stroke for the Union during the rebellion. There is nothing weak or feeble in this revolt. It is a split in the Bourbon party has woke to be bridged over. It has been made with a manifesto, determination and enthusiasm that at once stamp it as a permanent rupture that will revolutionize the political status in Kentucky, if it is properly supported and handled.

To appreciate the situation a brief retrospect is necessary. The outbreak of the war found Kentucky officially divided between the Bourbons, who were rebel and State supremacy in their sentiments and the National Union men of the old Clay-Whig stock, who never believed in the pretended heresy of State Sovereignty, who were strong enough to help keep the State in the Union, and who furnished their quota into Lincoln. Notwithstanding Kentucky remained in Union, the Rebel Louis succeeded in sending 50,000 or 60,000 men to the rebel army, and as many more who figured in guerrilla raids. But the Union men placed between 50,000 and 60,000 men upon the field, and rendered important and overlooked service in the suppression of the rebellion. Unquestionably, they did so with the impression that their slaves would not be emancipated, or, if they were, that they would receive compensation for them from the North. When the rebellion closed, however, their slaves were made free, and the South declined paying for them. Angered at this refusal, they went over to the Bourbons by thousands, and with them they have remained for seventeen years. Probably as many as 40,000 Union men joined this contract.

Their lot has not been a happy one, however. They have been the hewers of wood and the drawers of water for the Confederate Bourbons. They have endured proscription and persecution because they were National Unionists. The rebel Bourbons have controlled every so-called Democratic convention and nominated for office none but those who fought to destroy the Union, or who sympathized with their treason and rebellion.

The remainder of the Union men in Kentucky, white and colored, stuck to the Republican party, and numbered about 110,000 votes, while the Bourbon rebels with the help of 60,000 fooled Union men could poll 150,000 votes, and thus secure all the offices in the State and nine-tenths of the county and municipal places. In seventeen years the Union Democrats have had just one office, and that an unimportant one. The Bourbons control everything in the State, and took possession of the State Treasury and the Sound fund, which they have squandered. The feeding Union men, who bolted seventeen years ago, have turned the gladsome for the Bourbon axes and for their own moss at the same time. They have had no political reward or recognition for keeping the rebels in power seventeen years, and the only privilege allowed them was that of voting for the Bourbons for the Confederate ticket year after year. At last their position has become intolerable, and the recent Bourbon State Convention they asked for a few offices, such as tickets, that of Clerk of the Court of Appeals, but they and their candidate, Colonel A. T. Jacob, were unceremoniously handled out of doors, and asked sneeringly what they were going to do about it. This was the straw that broke the camel's back. The office is small and the pay large enough for a fight on the question of partisan bondage and intolerance. They have resolved to hold an immense and enthusiastic State Convention. They nominated Colonel Jacob for the office and issued a stirring appeal "to all true men, whether Republicans, Greenbackers, or old Union men, civilians, or soldiers, to join us in an honest, earnest effort to clean out the Augean stable."

The result of the Union Democrats has not greatly frightened the rebels or the Greenbackers of Kentucky an opportunity, if they are so, to redeem the State from the misrule of a Bourbon rebel minority. The figures of the last Presidential election will show the necessary to show this minority. The vote for Hancock was 187,000; for Garfield, 106,336, for Weaver (Greenback), 11,499—the combined vote against Hancock being 117,835. There are in the State fully 40,000 Union Democrats (formerly Clay Whigs). If but half of these withdraw and the Republicans and Greenbackers unite with them in support of Colonel Jacob, he would have nearly 10,000 majority, and if, as is more likely, the latter as a general ticket his majority would be so large as to unhesitatingly inaugurate a new regime and redeem most of the Congressional representation of the State. It is clearing to notice that there is a strong disposition on the part of U. S. Republicans not to put any candidate in nomination against Colonel Jacob, and the Louisville Commercial, the Republican organ, urges the following excellent reasons upon the party for the support of the Union Democratic candidate:

He will make an active canvass, and he will go through the State stumping the Democratic organization, charging it with not only the perversion of Union men, but with the grossest misrepresentation of their affairs. In addition to this, he will be a candidate that the Republican party is some extent. It does no more. No other effort will be that it will give some more necessary how many Republicans will vote for it so. Another good will be that we will have a fair test of the strength of the Bourbon Democracy, as against a candidate who is not a representative of the party, and who is not united and backed with an overwhelming and unity-won victory every Republican nominee, whether he may be, will be small. We must try to have a fair test of the strength of the Democratic party, and we must try to break up the Solid South and Solid South proscription. To do this we must avail ourselves of all opportunities that present themselves, and must not refuse to try any opportunity that does present itself because it is not exactly to our liking. We must commend itself to the Republicans at some other time in some other State.

This is good, sensible talk, and Republicans everywhere will watch with keen interest to see whether Kentucky Republicans have the good judgment to follow the advice.—Chicago Tribune.

The Brave Three Hundred.

It was the night Stonewall Jackson received his death wound. He had completely surprised Howard's Eleventh corps, and was driving them in the wildest confusion along toward the center of our line. In the fight they passed through a woody, just beyond which is a clearing, lay four of Sickles' battteries, a flying artillery battery, and the Eighth Pennsylvania cavalry. The batteries were not in position, but were "packed" awaiting orders. Through their lines dashed the fugitives, hotly pursued by Jackson's humerous corps of over 20,000 men. Infantry, artillery, ambulances, pack-mules, negroes and stragglers, one would scarcel men even looked upon, cause hearing just as if they were mad. Excitement and enthusiasm that at once stamp it as a permanent rupture that will revolutionize the political status in Kentucky, if it is properly supported and handled.

To appreciate the situation a brief retrospect is necessary. The outbreak of the war found Kentucky officially divided between the Bourbons, who were rebel and State supremacy in their sentiments and the National Union men of the old Clay-Whig stock, who never believed in the pretended heresy of State Sovereignty, who were strong enough to help keep the State in the Union, and who furnished their quota into Lincoln. Notwithstanding Kentucky remained in Union, the Rebel Louis succeeded in sending 50,000 or 60,000 men to the rebel army, and as many more who figured in guerrilla raids. But the Union men placed between 50,000 and 60,000 men upon the field, and rendered important and overlooked service in the suppression of the rebellion. Unquestionably, they did so with the impression that their slaves would not be emancipated, or, if they were, that they would receive compensation for them from the North. When the rebellion closed, however, their slaves were made free, and the South declined paying for them. Angered at this refusal, they went over to the Bourbons by thousands, and with them they have remained for seventeen years. Probably as many as 40,000 Union men joined this contract.

Their lot has not been a happy one, however. They have been the hewers of wood and the drawers of water for the Confederate Bourbons. They have endured proscription and persecution because they were National Unionists. The rebel Bourbons have controlled every so-called Democratic convention and nominated for office none but those who fought to destroy the Union, or who sympathized with their treason and rebellion.

The remainder of the Union men in Kentucky, white and colored, stuck to the Republican party, and numbered about 110,000 votes, while the Bourbon rebels with the help of 60,000 fooled Union men could poll 150,000 votes, and thus secure all the offices in the State and nine-tenths of the county and municipal places. In seventeen years the Union Democrats have had just one office, and that an unimportant one. The Bourbons control everything in the State, and took possession of the State Treasury and the Sound fund, which they have squandered. The feeding Union men, who bolted seventeen years ago, have turned the gladsome for the Bourbon axes and for their own moss at the same time. They have had no political reward or recognition for keeping the rebels in power seventeen years, and the only privilege allowed them was that of voting for the Confederate ticket year after year. At last their position has become intolerable, and the recent Bourbon State Convention they asked for a few offices, such as tickets, that of Clerk of the Court of Appeals, but they and their candidate, Colonel A. T. Jacob, were unceremoniously handled out of doors, and asked sneeringly what they were going to do about it. This was the straw that broke the camel's back. The office is small and the pay large enough for a fight on the question of partisan bondage and intolerance. They have resolved to hold an immense and enthusiastic State Convention. They nominated Colonel Jacob for the office and issued a stirring appeal "to all true men, whether Republicans, Greenbackers, or old Union men, civilians, or soldiers, to join us in an honest, earnest effort to clean out the Augean stable."

The result of the Union Democrats has not greatly frightened the rebels or the Greenbackers of Kentucky an opportunity, if they are so, to redeem the State from the misrule of a Bourbon rebel minority. The figures of the last Presidential election will show the necessary to show this minority. The vote for Hancock was 187,000; for Garfield, 106,336, for Weaver (Greenback), 11,499—the combined vote against Hancock being 117,835. There are in the State fully 40,000 Union Democrats (formerly Clay Whigs). If but half of these withdraw and the Republicans and Greenbackers unite with them in support of Colonel Jacob, he would have nearly 10,000 majority, and if, as is more likely, the latter as a general ticket his majority would be so large as to unhesitatingly inaugurate a new regime and redeem most of the Congressional representation of the State. It is clearing to notice that there is a strong disposition on the part of U. S. Republicans not to put any candidate in nomination against Colonel Jacob, and the Louisville Commercial, the Republican organ, urges the following excellent reasons upon the party for the support of the Union Democratic candidate:

He will make an active canvass, and he will go through the State stumping the Democratic organization, charging it with not only the perversion of Union men, but with the grossest misrepresentation of their affairs. In addition to this, he will be a candidate that the Republican party is some extent. It does no more. No other effort will be that it will give some more necessary how many Republicans will vote for it so. Another good will be that we will have a fair test of the strength of the Bourbon Democracy, as against a candidate who is not a representative of the party, and who is not united and backed with an overwhelming and unity-won victory every Republican nominee, whether he may be, will be small. We must try to have a fair test of the strength of the Democratic party, and we must try to break up the Solid South and Solid South proscription. To do this we must avail ourselves of all opportunities that present themselves, and must not refuse to try any opportunity that does present itself because it is not exactly to our liking. We must commend itself to the Republicans at some other time in some other State.

A Victim of Charity.

It was at a charity fair, and he had come there at the special request of his "cousin," who was at the head of the flower table. He opened the door hastily, and stood, but in hand, looking at the brilliant scene before him, when a young lady rushed up, and, grabbing him by the arm, said:

"O you must, you will, take a chance in our cake. Come right over here. This way."

Blushing to the roots of his hair, he stammered out that "Really he didn't think he possessed the requisite."

"O that's all right," said the young lady; "you'll know me better before you leave. I'm one of the managers, you understand. Come! The cake will all be taken if you don't hurry;" and she almost dragged him over to one of the middle tables. "There now—only fifty cents a slice, and you may get a good prize. You had better take three or four slices. It will be economy in the end."

"You're very good," he stammered, for he is out of small change, "but I haven't my pocketbook with me."

"Ah, that will be over so nice," said the young lady; "forsooth if you get the ring you can give it back, and we'll put it in to-morrow's fair."

"I—see," said the young man, with a sickly smile. "To be sure, but—"

"Then, that's all right," said the young lady, smiling sweetly. "You may cut the cake yourself."

"Promised?"

"Well, no, not exactly that; but you will take just one piece?" and she looked her whole soul into his eyes.

"I'll have to cut it, then."

"To be sure. There is your knife;" and she slipped a great silver one into his hand. He looked at it, looked at the cake, looked at the cake, looked at a dollar bill. "O, that is two, I see," said the young lady, as she observed another piece of cake on top of the one she had just given him. I know one person that is a nice person to be careful and not burn.—Boston Transcript.

The Forging of Steel.

Steel is one of the most valuable metals used in the mechanic arts, and every person great care in forging, hammering, annealing and general management. Fuss of the very best steel are condemned as bad, when nothing but the forging has rendered it in that condition, and all from a lack of knowledge in the management.

In forging cast steel the fire should be regulated by the size of the work. (I prefer a hollow fire to be fed with coke.) To ascertain the heat of the steel, draw it out of the fire often, for it requires no carefully watched to get the proper heat. If not hot enough, thrust it quickly in again. The proper degree of heat is to be judged by the eye, and care should be taken not to burn higher than is absolutely necessary to effect the desired purpose, and to use as few heats as possible in forging. Cast steel, after heating and forging, should be annealed. This is done by heating the work to a cherry red heat, and then burying it in pulverized charcoal, or ashes, where it may remain until perfectly cold. Cast steel should be hardened in water, which should be as cold as can be procured, and the hotter the steel is when put in the colder the water should be. Some kinds of steel require to be heated to a high degree, and others but little more than a cherry red heat. Some steels should be hardened in oil, instead of water, to prevent them from cracking. Steel should be hardened, the first perceptible tint is a light straw color, which is about 430 degrees above the heat reaches 430 degrees Fahrenheit. This gives the metal a dissidence of hardness that is unequaled for chastity. Testing it for lumens, razors and surgical instruments. PERILS OF THE DEEP.

"During my trip down the River Tagus, in Spain," said Captain Borton to a representative of this journal to a recent conversation of the sea serpent, "I had to 'shoot' 105 waterfalls, the most dangerous of which was the celebrated falls called 'Crossing the Straits of Mentira.' I had three fine lookers to a fight with sharks and crocodiles down the Sonador, where the Queen received a shipment of silver from an exciled and married Spaniard. —Nothing improves the appearance of the waitress at a table so much as a neat and tasteful apron. At the present fashionable gown in a church parlor a few very pretty aprons were seen. Still another was of fine linen, with a deep insertion of Russian crash.

Sheep and Goats.

There has suddenly sprung up an old idea of protecting sheep against dogs by adding a goat among the sheep to drive the dogs away, etc. But this has hardly made its appearance before it is contradicted. A gentleman of Washington writes in a New York paper that he has had a goat among his sheep, and trained a pair of Angora goats (a buck and ewe) on one occasion to range with the sheep for the space of a month, when the "buck could jump any fence in the county, and could not be kept from mixing in the corne of a mil fence by first getting on the fence and then into the field." In quite a short time every mother I had was as good jumper as the Angora buck, and had I not prevented them this summer I would have had a valuable flock of sheep ruined. Kill the dogs but keep the sheep and goats separate here as well as hereafter."

If the painful use of bells will not protect sheep, herding or yarding should be resorted to. The expense of herding is hardly known, any severe feet in height, and of course impenetrable to dogs, from one hundred to one hundred and fifty feet square, is nothing to construct to the loss of sheep. A fence solidly built of rails, poles, etc., would last the best part of a score of years, and there would be no trouble of gathering the sheep at night when once accustomed to it.—Germantown Telegraph.

When the basin is complete, place in it a small quantity of brush or floating weeds. If the spring bubbles, the female bayby from 50,000 to 500,000 eggs. The eggs will adhere to whatever they touch, and will soon hatch. The gross scum of a partially stagnant pond is fine food for the young fish. Mud in the bottom of the pond is beneficial. The fish will feed readily on kitchen-garden refuse, such as cabbage, leek, lettuce, bonnyc or other substances. Water solution will occur during the spring months

—The Bay City Press says. "Hemlock is fast attaining a prominence as one of the most valuable among the soft woods. Its adaptation to numerous uses is being more fully recognized, and this cone displayed sound in coming prominently to the fore as one of the most useful in the catalogue. The memory of the writer varies him back to the time, not very many years either, in the vicinity of the past, when in the purchase of lumber for lumbering purposes, in the Saginaw valley, hemlock was left entirely out of the calculation, and thousands of acres remaining unmarked by the axe of hemlock having been allowed to revert to the state after the same had been logged of the pine, because the hemlock was considered practically worthless except for the bark, and that could not be utilized because of the lack of transportation. Those hemlock lands logged slightly into prominence a few years ago at the time of the hemlock extract boom when several extract factories were established in the state, but the "great expectations" of the manufacturers in hemlock extract bonanzas appeared to have vanished into thin air in a fruitless search for profits which their projectors had promised. Up to within a few years hemlock was considered worthless, except for fencing posts, or for some of the purposes for which rough, coarse lumber was demanded. But as time has advanced in price and its growing scarcity, necessity has demonstrated that hemlock is especially adapted, not only for coarser work, but also for refined finishing and it being utilized in its natural state—being found capable of extraordinarily fine polish—for such purposes in some very expensive structures."

NEWS SUMMARY.

Important Intelligence from All Parts.

Congressional.

In the Senate on the 10th a memorial from the Legislature of Wisconsin was received, favoring the improvement of the Mississippi River in connection with the great lakes. Mr. Thurman, from the Military Committee, reported that 50,000 persons were driven from their homes by the overflow of the Mississippi, and introduced a joint resolution appropriating $100,000 additional for the sufferers, which was passed. The Postal Appropriation bill was taken up and debated. A special message from the President was received, recommending the appointment of a commission to examine our Colonies. In the House two new Arkansas Congressmen were elected, and several private measures were reported. After a lengthy debate the bill was passed to-day, without amendment, by 147 to 87. The Senate to-day took substantially the Senate bill for that of the House, and the bill was signed and adjourned.

In the Senate on the 11th the bill appropriating $50,000 for a monument on the battlefield of Monmouth was passed. A bill providing an annual allowance to Mrs. Sherman, widow of the late General Sherman, of $10,000 was introduced by Mr. Logan. Mr. Hoar introduced a bill to repeal the act of 1872, providing for the appointment of the chief clerks of the several bureaus of the Treasury Department, and it was passed. The House passed a resolution directing the Judiciary Committee to enquire if the resignation of Sergeant Mason by a District court was not in violation of the laws of the United States. The Senate bill to increase the relief for the Mississippi sufferers to $200,000, and authorizing the expenditure of a portion thereof for labor on the levees. The bill was rejected by unanimous consent and then passed.

Mr. Voorhees introduced a bill in the Senate on the 12th to increase the pensions of persons who have lost a leg or an arm or been permanently disabled in the military or naval service from $18 to $24 per month. Mr. Sherman presented a protest by 1,000 soldiers against reducing the Fifty Dollar pensions. Mr. Logan addressed the Senate on his bill to establish a National University for the higher education. The Senate to-day refused to take up, and the time for the same was passed to 12noon. Mr. Edmunds moved to add to the insertion of a clause providing that Senators or Representatives shall not frank any package containing coin passed or to be passed. Mr. Wallace, in opposition, said he would rather pay the postage himself than to have the privilege abused. The Senate refused to consider the amendment by a decisive vote. Mr. Voorhees, in support of the bill, said he believed he was as ambassador from the people to the Government.

A CONVICT at Arkansas City, Ark., on the 9th destroyed five houses. No lives were lost.

THE NEW TAX LAW.

Full Text of the General Tax Bill as Passed by the Legislature.

A BILL to provide for the assessment of property and the levy and collection of taxes thereon.

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF MICHIGAN ENACT:

TAXATION.

SECTION 1. The People of the State of Michigan enact, That all property within the jurisdiction of the State, not exempted by law, shall be subject to taxation.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of taxation, real property shall include all lands within the state, and all buildings and fixtures thereon, and all rights and privileges connected with or otherwise as a property provided by law; personal property shall include all goods, chattels and effects within the state, all shares, claims and choses in action belonging to inhabitants of this state, whether the same be within or without the state, except that property belonging to inhabitants of this state, which is employed in the business of transportation, and which is assessed by the State Board of Assessors, shall be assessed in the township or ward where the principal office for the transaction of the business of such property is located, and not elsewhere; and all property belonging to inhabitants of this state, which is employed in the business of banking, shall be assessed in the township or ward where the principal office for the transaction of the business of such banking is located, and not elsewhere.

Real Property—Exempt.

All property belonging to the United States, to this state, or to any county, city, village or township, and used exclusively for the purposes of such government, shall be exempt from taxation; but lands purchased at tax sales and held by the state.

All personal property of all library, benevolent, charitable and educational institutions incorporated under the laws of this state, such real estate as shall be exempted from taxation by the Legislature.

All horses of public worship with the land on which they stand, the furniture therein, and the lots used for burial purposes, and owned by any religious society of this state, or by trustees for such.

All public grounds, including streets and alleys, and the rights of burial therein and the tombs and monuments therein, and the use for that purpose. Provided, That the stock in any cemetery association, the property of which is not exempt from taxation, shall be assessed as other stock in such association is assessed.

All household goods and other personal property of every other person under guardianship, to the value of $300, and the tools and implements of any person under guardianship, to the value of $100, and the stock in trade of any person under guardianship, to the value of $500, unless the same be employed in banking, or in the business of transportation, or in the business of buying and selling such property.

All moneys, credits, bonds and stock owned by any person, to the amount of his debts owing by him to bona fide creditors.

All wearing apparel of every person.

All libraries, furniture and implements of every literary, scientific or benevolent society.

All agricultural implements and machinery of every person.

Critical moving.

A special dispatch to the Chicago Tribune, dated Washington, March 5, says:

Throughout the whole week of universal excitement we heard the golden thread of humor running through it all. In the midst of the most serious discussion, the most startling that can happen in a country, there seems to be found overboard and underfoot of sinks to amuse for himself.

Political parties, like people, are born, not made. Neither parties nor men, however wise, can make them to order and make a platform, and put a party in which will live and flourish.

After the fire and blood of the battle-field have disappeared, and the dust has shown our destroying power in ashes, and we acknowledge as in the ordinary which represent the expenditures of the nation.

I look forward with joy and hope to the day when our brave people, one in heart, one in their appreciation for freedom and peace, shall see the darkness through which we have traveled was but a part of that stern but beneficent discipline by which the great Inspirer of events has been leading us on to a higher and more national life.

The man who wants to serve his country most gets himself in the line of its leading thought, and that is, the restoration of business, trade, commerce, industry, sound political sentiment, hard money and honest payment of all obligations, and the man who can aid anything in the direction of the accomplishment of one of these purposes is a public benefactor.

Queen Victoria's Reign.

Queen Victoria's empire from death as the lion's of the world he succeeds the other day naturally directs attention to the mature age which she has attained, and the unusual length of her reign. She was born on the 24th day of May, 1819, and has therefore nearly completed her 67th year. She has thus already attained an age exceeded by only eleven of the seventeen sovereigns of England, dating from the Norman conquest—namely Henry I, who lived to the age of 67; Henry III, who lived to be 65 years; Edward I, who lived to be 67 years; Edward III, who attained 65 years; Queen Elizabeth, who reached 69 years; James II, who lived 68 years; George I, 67 years; George II, 77 years; George III, her grandfather, who lingered in imbecility until he was 82; George IV, her uncle, who was 68 when he died, and William IV, another uncle, who reached 72 years. The queen ascended the throne on June 20, 1837, just after she had completed her 18th year. She has, therefore now been on the throne 44 years, 8 months and 20 days. Queen Elizabeth ascended the throne on November 17, 1558, in the 26th year, and died on March 24, 1604, having reigned 44 years, 4 mo, and 7 days. The reign of Victoria, therefore, exceeds that of the Virgin Queen by something over four months, and has been exceeded in those of her predecessors only—Henry III, who reigned 56 years; Edward III, who reigned 50 years; and George III, reigned for the long period of 60 years. Queen Victoria has, in fact almost outlived by seven years every bishop and every judge whom she found installed in England, Scotland and Ireland. She has witnessed the funeral of every premier who has served under her except Mr. Gladstone. Not a single cabinet minister of her uncle and predecessor's days survives; and of those who held inferior offices under her first and favorite Premier, Lord Melbourne, there can be found among the living only Viscount Hall, as, then Mr. Charles Wood, and Lord Hatherly, now Mr. Gray. Of the members of the privy council who sat in June, 1837, to administer to her the oath but two or three survive. She has received the homage of the Archbishops of Canterbury, of four Archbishops of York and of five Bishops of Chichester, Lichfield and Durham successively. She has filled each of the three chief justiceships twice at least; she has received the address of four successive speakers of the house of commons; she has intrusted the great seal of the kingdom to no less than eleven different lord chancellors, and she has commissioned eight successive premiers to form an less than fourteen different administrations.

RICHARD J. SMITH Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, : MICHIGAN.

THE UNBIDDEN GUEST.

Within my home that empty seemed I sat
And prayed for greater blessings still
That was supplied my every need and mean
And wished for more.

And I, poor ingrate, grew restless for that

I had not, saying if great gifts of gold
Were only mine, pastures to flocked lands,
Were also mine, with rest for burdened hands
If love, the best I wanted, would secure and bind
To mine my heart and mine should be mate
With me tirelessly prayer would come and
And life would round out, from that entrance-into a fullness as now it could never be.

And so, through prayer, against me smiled
And as I prayed for future, broader steps,
Making a basis for the very thing
In need I grew for that which I had not.

And then one came and my heart's desire
Into the home came mother Maynard pool.
She was a widow, and I had them for my need.

She answered, "Nay, my child; and I am sorry

Upon to me, I pray, make me the scene,
Just how glad and although it is a joy
Of home or love within my hand I hold,
That was to me, a sacrifice to give.

"That thou hast found her," Fay the grace,
Soft was her voice and to her standing eyes
I was glad to see, and when I saw
My heart was sore, and, with tardy grace,

I took her entire. How transformed
Was then my home! Her presence at my feet
So long had imparted! How wide and
So was she that made me when I had been lost!

Half grew beautiful, with calm content
But in that beautiful wealth of love and care
The door I closed the hand of discontent

A WEDDING SANS CEREMONY.

"One thing I am determined upon," remarked Mrs. Sue Hathaway, decidedly, "you, Fan, shall have a decently conventional wedding. What I think of the hideous scramble way in which Charlie and I stole through the ceremony, like two murderers that we haven't quenched sense, but that we were ever really married at all."

"Tell me about it, Sue dear," coaxed Mrs. Hathaway's youngest and last sister, as she folded and replaced in their bureau the dainty articles she had been examining with much commotion. You have always been of your wedding day as the most unhappy day of your life; but I cannot conceive how that can be, when you and Charlie have now another so dearly."

"And if we had not loved each other beyond all possibility of quarreling, we would certainly have broken ourselves to death as a result of such a farce. I see I am going to be forced to relate the whole disgraceful story, and I suppose I must submit respectfully and in good form. I am a manager, as you say, and it was for that very reason that the entire arrangement of my wedding was left to me. We were living in the old family mansion in the country—two miles from the church, and of course the wedding had to be at the house. This troubled me from the first, for the ceremony is always so much more solemn and impressive before the altar, and I wanted to think of it as a sacrament, to really feel the sacredness of the vows I was taking upon myself. Instead of this, I knew perfectly well that I would be distracted by people whisperings and giggling during the minister's very prayer. What restraint can there be in parlors where one has danced the Cramond with company, and I was mercilessly conscious that everything would be in confusion. Charlie's family were coming; they are very aristocratic, and I was more afraid of them than I am now, especially of his sister Adelaide. She is the most stylish and spiteful creature in the world, did all she could to spoil the details, wanted Charlie to marry some society girl of her circle of hops. Then there was Aunt Sue Stockstill, for whom I was named. We were all very fond of her, and our love was tempered with a respectful admiration which amounted almost to fear.

"The entire second floor was given up to the ladies' dressing rooms, and the little bedrooms under the Mansard roof. You and I had Bridget's room, and she slept on a pallet in the kitchen. Charlie had a cot in the hall. All of our boys slept in the middle halls. Talmer among themselves in the hammock on the back piazza, and Jack, who is but a boy, had to sleep in the stable loft

Editor Sentinel:

Where the announcement is made that an entertainment will be given, such as an entertainment by the "Historic Society" of this village, people go there with the expectation of being interested, or amused, or both, either in a literary, musical or dramatic way, and do not expect to be tacitly asked to listen to the ideas of any one who has a strong partizan bias, slurs or that bias be political or religious. People with abundance of good nature, and a large amount of liberal feeling towards all classes and creeds, might be inclined to take offense at the principle of some who wish to use the occasion to put forth their peculiar ideas, even when done with all nicety of reading, aided by earnestness and sincerity, and when, of course, no offence was intended. Those who have ideas they may wish others to know can by a little judicious selection find the proper place for the elucidation of any beauties they may contain, without running the risk of well being on useless zeal to those who may look upon the same matter in a vastly different light.

The Blow at Polygamy.

To the honor of the Republican party every one of its Representatives in the House voted for the Edmunds bill. All of Senator Edmunds, while forty-seven Democrats and one Texas Greenbacker voted against it. The bill has thus been adopted precisely as it came from the Senate. It was introduced, advocated and carried by the Republicans in each House, and it will become a law in the signature of a Republican President.
Upon healthy, fallacious arguments, sweeping assumptions, or upon the

WILLARD A. SMITH.
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Jo Smith's Polygamy.

"We brought our polygamy to Utah with us," said Brigham Young not long before his death, and there is no doubt that for once he spoke the truth. There is not an abomination in the Mormon church today that did not belong to it in the time of Jo Smith, and there is nothing worse at Salt Lake than there was at Nauvoo at Kirland, and wherever else the Mormons have for longer or shorter time made a stay. The whole Mormon system is course and beastly from beginning to end, and it is idle to imagine that the temporary extirpation of Polygamy, if such a thing is possible, will convert the Mormons into good American citizens. Their rulers are necessarily impostors and scoundrels and they have "revelations" whenever it may be necessary, and these revelations constitute the higher law of the Mormons which they are bound to obey in preference to any law that congress can make.

It is truth that Smith's "Book of Mormon" and "Book of Covenants" both condemn polygamy, but there are "prophecies" by Smith, of a later date than either, which because they are later, are reckoned of superior authority in cases of conflicts. One of these Bringham Young claimed as the original authority for the practice of polygamy, though how much of the revelation was Smith and how much Young it would be difficult to say. Young made a former promulgation of the doctrine, though the practice had existed for some time, on August 29, 1852, in a large public meeting in Salt Lake City, claiming that the revelation was made to Smith July 12, 1843. He said:

You heard Brother Pratt state this morning that a revelation would be read this afternoon which was given previous to Joseph's death. It contains a doctrine a small portion of the world is opposed to; but I can deliver a prophecy upon it. Though that doctrine has not been preached by the elders, this people have believed for years. The original copy of this revelation was burned up. William Clayton was the man who wrote it from the mouth of the prophet. In the meantime it was in Bishop Whitney's possession. He wished the privilege to copy it, which brother Joseph granted. Sister Emma (Joseph Smith's wife) burned that original. The reason I mention this is because that the people who did know of the revelation suppose it is now in existence. The revelation will be read to you. The principle spoken upon by Brother Pratt we believe in.

Many others are of the same mind. They are not ignorant of what we are doing in our social capacity. They have cried, proclaim it; but it would not do a few years ago—everything must come in its time, as there is a time for all things, I am now ready to proclaim it.

These revelations have been in my possession many years; and who has known it? None but those who should know it. I keep a patent lock on my desk, and there does not anything leak out that should not.

It is well known that as early as the spring of 1844 there was an excitement in Illinois about the Mormons at Nauvoo having adopted polygamy. Certain Mormon women made affidavits that Smith had pretended have a revelation in favor of "a plurality of wives, and of the sealing up of persons to eternal life" through such a process, and that they had been invited by Smith to become his spiritual wives. The upshot of this was that mobs killed Smith and drove his crew out of the state.

The Mormon "church" is entitled to no more respect than a cattle show. Its pretense of supreme authority in civil affairs must be blotted out before there will be peace or safety with Mormonism. The war has only just begun.—Post & Tribune.

WILLARD A. SMITH,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR

Communication.

Editor of the Sentinel:

At the last meeting of the "Historical Society" one of its members suggested that a history of Charlevoix and the surrounding county, be written up now and preserved in the archives of the society, and that such a history would, in a hundred years hence, be worth its weight in silver. I do not know that the gentleman weighed carefully his words before giving utterance to such extravagant proclivities. Neither, probably, did he weigh the silver. Does he not expect too much, and does not his enthusiasm interfere with his judgment. Such a history worth its weight in silver! Of course, much would depend upon the style of penmanship adopted by the author. The Declaration of Independence has been written in a space that could be covered by a ten cents piece, and if that style was adopted it is evident not much paper would be required. On the other hand, if but one letter of each word of the entire history were to be written on each page of foolscap sized, the result would be a consumption of considerable more paper. But without resorting to either extreme we will suppose the writer—man or woman—to elaborate his or her thoughts as much as necessary. I presume, the history of this section could be written upon, say, two score of legal cap, or ordinary foolscap. Now, the weight of that much writing material word be about one pound. Just think of the value of that manuscript research to the historical hunters a hundred years hence! A pound of manuscript containing the stirring events, and the life's breath, escapes, deed and toil of the early settlers, up to the present time! And its worth? Its weight in silver! A pound of silver! A pound of coined silver makes about eighteen dollars! Just think of it, eighteen dollars worth of history handed down to posterity without even fee or reward. Posterity, certainly has never done much for us. But we are a liberal people and love as a liberal people are consequently magnanimous. Let us move on with the history. An appreciative age will abundantly thank us for our laudable spirit and praiseworthy effort. The eyes of a nation are upon us, hence let duty, and posterity, and history be inscribed upon our banners.

To the Editor of the SENTINEL:

While we have been busily engaged in getting side walks, park, etc., and rightly too, we seem to slumber over one thing regarding which we ought to be wide awake. Notwithstanding that one house has been burned down, several others badly scorched, and lastly J. M. Clark's office came near burning, which, if it had would have endangered the best buildings in the village, we don't seem to realize our danger. Now in view of all this, had we not better wake up and make some provisions to control the element in case of a conflagration.

PROBATE ORDER.

STATE OF MICHIGAN, } ss.
County of Charlevoix, }

At a session of the Probate Court for said County of Charlevoix, held at the Village of Charlevoix, on the fifteenth day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two.

Present, Hon. Wm. Staffel, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Peter Lenosky, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Peter Lenosky, praying that administration of said estate may be granted to himself or to some other suitable person.

Thereupon, it is ordered, that Tuesday, the twenty-fifth day of April, next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs at law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate Office, in the village of Charlevoix, in said County, and show cause why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted; and it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be published in the CHARLEVOIX SENTINEL, a newspaper printed and circulated in said County of Charlevoix, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

The following letter, written by Attorney-General Brewster to Dallas Sanders, Assistant District-Attorney of the United States, at Charleston, S. C., explains itself. The letter, dated at Washington March 18, is in part as follows:

I have just received a short note from you, together with a pamphlet from a South Carolina paper. I know full well and have personally taken pains, for many years of honor and responsibility, to keep myself free from any political bias or prejudice, and I am not going to allow myself to be led into it now. But I feel constrained to say, and Mr. Matthews authorizes me to say, that he entirely agrees with me. Mr. Wallace's letter is a most unfortunate production, and I am pained more than I can express that any man who has been honored by the confidence of the President should have written such a letter. It is not only unofficial and undignified, but it is full of misrepresentation and unfounded assumption. It is not true that the Republican party has ever proposed or favored any force bill. It is not true that the Republican party has ever proposed to interfere in any way with the election of Congressmen in any portion of the country. It is not true that the Republican party has ever proposed to interfere in any way with the election of State officers, and it is not true that the Republican party has ever proposed to interfere in any way with the election of municipal officers, and it is not true that the Republican party has ever proposed to interfere in any way with the election of any officers whatever, except those officers who have been appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and those who directly represent the United States in the exercise of its constitutional functions. Judge Advocate General Swaim recommends that Sergeant Mason's conviction and sentence be set aside. Gen. Swaim apparently takes to heart the question that we put a fortnight or so ago, "How does anybody know that Mason was shooting at Guiteau, anyway?"

A Middlebury, Vt., jeweler has made a clock containing an automatic representation of the assassination of President Garfield. The figures are of wood, about two inches high, and the whole movement, including the execution of Guiteau, takes about three minutes.

There are no half-breeds, stalwarts or Democrats on the question of the presidential dinners. A Dakota Blizzard.

On Sunday, March 26th one of the terrific blizzards called "blizzards" swept over Dakota with its usual result. Special dispatches from St Paul say the blizzard extended from southern Dakota to Manitoba," and it said "and ill effects are generally conceded." This is one of all the big blizzard waves that sweep over that section. The men are concealed as far as it is possible to conceal them. The owners of mines and mills, who are constantly on operation drill not be deterred by no trouble reports of the blizzard, and the telegraphic, all modify the truth so that in the United man in which it reaches its end or to county that is not it will not frighten them away. The result of the facts of the late blizzard has leaked out.

One man was found frozen to death on the prairie near St. Vincent, and two near Brackenridge. Several isolated families had narrow escapes.

A lumberman, name unknown, starting on a furlough from Fort Stanton, D. T., died from exposure Thursday. He was going to Germany.

A stage driver named Howard was found dead near lake Wahbaw, half a mile from home.

Mrs. Long and her 10-year-old son Albert were found dead near Granburn, D. T. They were going to see a sick neighbor.

It is reported that 13 land explorers who started from Aberdeen and Watertown, are missing since Monday, and another of their parties have been found.

The St. Paul dispatch leaves no room to doubt that the blizzard mentioned is the most severe storm that ever swept over that section of country, and that it the factors are made public it will be learned that many scores of persons were frozen to death.

If this was an extraordinary event it would attract no more attention than any other sudden and appalling calamity—But it is not an extraordinary occurrence. It is a thing to be looked for. It is one of common occurrence, paving the Dakota ties in the immediate track of the great polar storms. And this has ought to be widely known. Many people in Michigan have or have had the Dakota fever. Beautifully illustrated maps and pamphlets give glowing pictures of the soil of that region and its fertility, while the exaggerate the salubrity of its summer climate. But they are all deathly silent about its frostiness in the storm centers and about the freezing blasts which cut down in such life almost instantaneously. The books and pamphlets have also wholly distorted and many have been lured by them from as delightful a climate as can be found in the world to a region where any hour of any day they may be frozen to death by one of Dakota's annihilating blizzards.

Col. Wm. D. Wilkins, who died of apoplexy at his home in Detroit on Friday last, was one of Michigan's most respected and honored citizens. He was born in Pittsburg, Pa., in 1826, and was the son of Ross Wilkins, one of the judges of the United States court at Detroit when Michigan was a territory. Wm. D. graduated at the Detroit branch of the university. He early entered a career for military deeds and when a mere boy was an active member of the old Brady guards, and later of the Detroit light guard, of which company he was a first lieutenant. When the Mexican war broke out, scarcely 20 years of age, young Wilkins responded to the call for volunteers, and was made second lieutenant and quarter-master of Col. Gen. W. Morgan's regiment, which joined Scott's army at Jalapa in 1847, and from thenceforth participated in every engagement until the stars and stripes floated over the city of Mexico. On the bloody field of Contreras, for conspicuous gallantry, he was breveted a first lieutenant, and was afterwards commissioned as such.—Previous to this in the affair at the National Bridge, with but two companies of infantry, he charged two Mexican batteries, and a fierce hand to hand encounter ensued. The Mexicans were finally compelled to yield. President Polk especially complimented lieutenant Wilkins for his gallantry at Paso Ovejas, National Bridge, and Cerro Gordo. He was mustered out of service in 1848, and resumed the study of law. In 1849 he was appointed clerk of the U. S. district court in Michigan, and in 1850 was made U. S. commissioner. In 1855 he was appointed to the captaincy in the 1st U. S. cavalry of which Gen. Custer is Mc Clellan was colonel, but declined the position. He was admitted to practice in the U. S. courts in 1851, and in 1859 was made clerk of the U. S. circuit court. He took great interest in our common school system and was twice president of the Detroit school board. On the breaking out of the war of the rebellion in 1861, he was the second man to volunteer to Michigan, and Gov. Blair commissioned him as major and inspector of state troops. He was later taken prisoner, and endured for many months the horrors and hardships of Libby prison.—He was breveted major for gallant conduct at Cedar Mountain, and for meritorious conduct at Chancellorsville made his brevet colonel. On March 13, 1865, he was breveted colonel. He was a staunch democrat, and prominent in the councils of this party, but was never a seeker after office. He was an extensive traveler, having visited the old world four times, a brilliant conversationalist, and a magnetic writer. His record in civil life was as honorable as was his military career.—Lansing Republican.

A Winter's Reign at Beaver Island News

Beaver Island, Jan 27th.

I had a little experience in the pastime of winter navigation a week ago. I left Holland for Beaver Island on the morning of Jan. 20th. It was clear and calm and I had never in my life in so short a time. In the afternoon I attempted to return, but when half a mile out I was caught in a blizzard from the north west. Snow fell incessantly, and the cold grew rapidly more cold. My only chance was to return to Beaver Island. The wind increased and what seemed to be a little was caught in the driving ice. My situation was a perilous one, but I managed by no use I was determined by some how also gave the ship up, and I was soon rescued by means of boats and drifted with upon the rocks at last. I rejoiced to hear a couple days afterwards on the Zouth I crossed to High Island in safety.

We are needing a mail here very badly and in the absence of that some are using to benefit, as the following will show.

On Wednesday, the 29th, Rev. Father Gallagher united in marriage George Miller, P. M., to Miss Grace Gallagher, daughter of James Gallagher. At the same time Phil Gallagher united Miss Phil, her sister, in marriage to Mrs. Miller Gillespie, daughter of John Gillispie. The wedding festivities were kept up all night.

St. James, March, 10.

On High Island the farmers have been very industrious during the winter getting out ties, posts and wood, which they will ship to Beaver Island, who will there ship our goods to ship when navigation opens. one cargo each of ties, posts and wood.

The Lake & River steamship Co., of Hamilton, Canada, have appointed James B. Hollis, their attorney and agent in securing what property was saved from the wreck of the steamer Lake Erie; also to secure the machinery if found. He offers a reward of one hundred dollars to anyone who locate the wreck, which is supposed to be in one of the reefs S. W. or W. of High Island.

High Beach an old resident and a fine, industrious business man, aged about 50 years, died and was buried on Ash Wednesday. His mother died about two months before him, at the ripe old age of 90 years. She requested them to bring her coffin into his room so he could see her before she was buried, then closed her several times when they carried her to the tomb. Mrs. John Gallagher, a daughter of Hugh Boyle, is lying dangerously ill.

We have had no mail for five weeks and things are getting rather monotonous.

Neil Gallagher is lengthening the schooner W. A. Smith. Bernard O'Donnell, James Gallagher and others are getting out ties and posts and the Beaver Islanders have been very industrious this winter.

W.

St. James, March 17.

No mail for over six weeks.

A girl named Sophia Boyle came near being drowned here Feb. 20th. She broke through the ice and Charles Gallagher reached her in time to catch hold of the waist that was in her head, and with the assistance of another boy pulled her out.

There is some ranting done on the ice round the Harbor. Ben Wilkins's horse beats the other two mile.

Wilkins trotting has been laid up with a sprained ankle; he was not sleigh riding yesterday.

Perch fishing is unusually good here, and many trout are caught off the Harbor.

A squaw named Chawin attempted to hang herself a few days ago, but was cut down by her father.

Why should our men leave Michigan for a climate like that? Still equally as good, fully as healthy, quite as cheap, with better water, cheaper timber, nearer to market, where every farm product commands better prices can be found right here in Michigan. Hundreds of thousands of acres of such land can be found on the upper peninsula or on the Lower. Taking all things into account there is no Michigan lands are infinitely more desirable for the young and active who desire to settle in a new country, and everywhere in Michigan there is a climate the equal of Dakota at its best, but absolutely free from the destructive blizzards which sweep over that terrible freezing men and beasts to death almost as a monomat.

We earnestly invite the attention of Michigan people to these facts, and invite them to carefully investigate the frequency and destructive forces of Dakota storms before they leave the prairie state for that farseeing blizzard smitten territory.—Post & Tribune.

Secretary Folger thinks the President makes a great mistake that he does not deny his reported cabinet intentions, or else fulfil the promissions of the busy gossiping correspondents by nominating some of the particulars substitutes polite ma sinecure. This is true, in an opinion changed upon Secretary Folger. If he really expressed it, it shows that in some things Secretary Folger is a little fresh.

Alick Stevens never went into the private chamber at Washington, and says he never will even in threshold until he has official business there.

NEWS SUMMARY.

Important Intelligence from All Parts.

Congressional.

A RESOLUTION in favor of the Lowell Bookpress and was considered in the Senate on the 18th. A bill was passed to create pensioners of the widows of Brevet Major-Generals Hooker and Polk. The Agricultural Appropriation bill was passed. A bill was introduced in the Senate to refund to the Southern States the direct taxes collected during the war. A bill was introduced by Mr. Whyte, Maryland, providing for the appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of a Commissioner of Justice to aid in the prosecution of offenders against the internal revenue laws. Mr. Hendricks introduced a bill to provide for the payment of the bonds of the United States in coin. Mr. Bayard introduced a resolution requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to report to the Senate the amount of money paid to informers and detectives for the discovery of violations of the internal revenue laws since the passage of the act of March 3, 1865, and the names of the persons to whom such payments have been made. The Senate Committee on Public Lands reported favorably on the bill to grant lands to the Texas Pacific Railroad Company. The Senate Committee on Commerce reported favorably on the bill to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River

Marine News.

—The schooner Rob Roy is in port.

—The tug Bob Stevenson came down from Ironton Saturday.

—The schooner Higgie is at Ironton loading pig iron for Chicago. She had some difficulty in working her way there through the ice.

—The schooner Higgie, of course, in entering the harbor, ran a foul of the south bridge approach Friday. The condition of that part of the bridge is a nuisance, and should be fixed.

—The propeller Lawrence and Champlain arrived in the harbor Friday evening looking like new boats. These steamers still run opposition in each other this season. They will both stop here,—the Lawrence at Upright, Emery & Co's dock, and the Champlain at Fox's.

—The propeller Truesdell, which was purchased last fall by the Canton of the sad goner Bertie Calkins, for carrying ore from Escanaba to Ironton, has had a hard old luck. The steamer Michigan, last Friday discovered her about twenty miles out from Grand Haven, flying a distress signal. Her boats were lost, her smokestack gone, her bulwarks down, and she was leaking badly. She was towed into Grand Haven, where she is undergoing repairs.

—The Charlevoix Odd Fellows have purchased of L. D. Hartshorne twenty-five feet front on his lot immediately adjoining the proposed new building, for $350. They intend to erect a building next summer.

—I am inclined to think the boys up at Boyne City were a little too sanguine about that county seat business. Well, we are glad it didn't raise the bond. The little sum of $200 won't break me, and the boys had lots of fun with it.—C. T. E.

Hastings from Hayes—By Oinx.

—E. H. Burgess went to Grand Rapids last Thursday to purchase machinery for his saw mill.

—The prospect is very favorable at present for the erection of a new building on the hall way farm to be used as a store.

—S. W. Sniffer will move into the house formerly occupied by J. Mendaville.

—Joshua Mandaville has ordered his household goods to be sent to him, he having taken up his residence in Warren Co. Pa.

—According to report in Hayes the business men of Charlevoix are a set of cut throats. We have found them no more business relations as genial and accommodating men as you will find anywhere. Some people want to be carried around on a chip or they would curse their grandmother.

—The Detroit Free Press gives some new arithmetical problems to solve, among the best of which is the following: A woman arrives at the depot about noon time. She has in the seven persons, say "good by" to thirteen others and here leave to twenty-two relatives, and now to four parcels. She accomplished it all and has anyone seconds to spare to tell a dear friend how to mix seven different ingredients into a mince pie. How long did it take the train to reach Chicago.

Diptheria.

Elder Sentry:

As diptheria, at this time, seems to be epidemic, and as it is very contagious, it may pay to be on the watch, and treat it, in its first symptoms, which are a peculiar headache, furred tongue, sore swelled sore throat, tonsils swelled, and fever, with great lassitude. Being some what exposed to the sickness, I took it at last, I had all the symptoms, sore throat swelled tonsils, high fever, and a bad headache. Now for the remedy. First I bathed my feet in hot water, then I put four drops of fluid extract veratrum album, in a cup of sweetened water, diverted into four doses, and urged at once or two hours, made a strong tea of red pepper and drank it, put a cloth saturated in red pepper tea around my neck, took a little thimble of potass, and in less than an hour the tough phlegm in my throat came away as free as water. By the time the fever had abated, and I had diphtheria under control. I then regulated the kidneys and bowels, to extra duty, in order to eliminate as quick as possible, all that might remain, of the poison. So that to day I am able to write to the SENTINEL, that others might profit by our experience. Prompt action is the cure is half the cure.

I do not give this as a specific, but simply as a treatment, to any case that has proved successfull.

BREVITIES.

—Gerlock & Ingalls' billiard hall opened Monday.

—Work on the new livery barn is progressing rapidly.

—Never such a boom the thirteenth year of the SENTINEL experience.

—We have not seen the Clinc. Eller's new add. Look for it next week.

—A passenger coach was destroyed by fire at Traverse City Saturday morning.

—T. N. Cowen is in town setting up machinery for D. I. Wetmore and Wm. Cate, the steamer Grenfell is now being repaired on the Pere Marquette at Bay City.

—The next monthly of the Common Council will be held at the Odd Fellow's Hall.

—S. E. Hughes of C. B. Reed, was in town Thursday and Friday, of last week.

—Look for a change of S. H. Coy's advertisement next week. He is selling boots and shoes cheap.

—The Cross Lot crew having the keel for the Conservative, were the supposed job about 60 feet long.

—We wish to impress upon the minds of our readers the importance of saving our duplicate issues. This is about time to begin to look about for next year.

—The passenger train from Boyne on the Cheboygan Summer Resort branch, have been discontinued for the present.

—Fred Harris was elected superintendent of Sunday and Assistant Organist at Grace Episcopal Church, Beaver Island.

—The schooner Lucy Ames arrived in port Monday morning with a load of lumber for Upright Emery and Co.

—The schooner Sea Gem and schooner L. P. Mason and Hercules, cleared yesterday on Manistee with cargoes.

—Advertisement of pigeon stencil on the back of Dimmick's packet and the word into the line, one day last week. It can be corrected.

—John Pelgrober, of Whitewater, Mich., was in town last week setting up the machinery of Wm. Kyselberg's, of which he is a constructor.

—The compromise in the Davidson Sawyer, et Norwood, land purchased of Boyd, between 2½ acres of land. It brought the sum of $10 cents.

—Spencer, Bartholomew & Co. are preparing their fisheries for the season of 1882, and will soon be in place a fine line of nets to use.

—The Jamestown house organized a Ladies Sewing Circle, of which Hiram Bartholomew is President and Florence Smith, Secretary. They have weekly meetings.

—The time arrives when the fourteen year old L. D. Bartholomew now resides on Bridge street and the carpenters will push the work rapidly forward.

—F. Bolo is endeavoring for Chase's Dictionary of Universal Knowledge, a book of over 800, and a volume which will be a valuable acquisition to any library. Mr. Mowry expects for books on this Any one in want of a book should see Mr. Mowry, examine the work as it is issued as American.

—Lee and Hall of Sailor for erecting a large building to the item company, one of the finest, and if resulted in a new F. Bartholomew, who engage the joiner work on the building. The supposed the work as far as heard as American.

—The Charlevoix Bank recently imported by J. Mob. Baton from Texas, one of the finest and most intelligent horses we have ever seen in this section. We are at a loss to know what this community can boast of. Baton may be proud of his purchase for years and years of this can find. Mr. Baton made Mr. Eaton has been a fine horse.

—Dispatches to Friday a cloud of dust appeared over the hill on the Boyne road, as it came nearer and nearer, a well-known team and well-known driver, followed by J. Mob. Eaton's investment of Texas, came and rushed on all running home and up to the two horses and riders, coming up the rear came A. J. Cameron on his mustang in Mexican saddles. The animals nearly fell in number and brought down on a gallop, and were very much inflated for a loaded down and team, and travelling journey, but not as long as well even some good horses of hers.

—Work on the steamer Chris Reiss is progressing. She is receiving a hurricane deck, and a thorough overhauling in her upper works. She will be the boat for the route, when completed.

—Since writing the railroad article which appeared in last week's SENTINEL, our statements have been corroborated from others and equally as reliable sources. Work has been commenced on the Mackinaw extension, and the probabilities are nearly long for a road from that direction. Two railroads for Charlevoix within two years it by no means unlikely.

—Assessors of Wilson informs us that at the present vote on the county seat re moval, several wagon loads of men came in the polls and voted, whom the still are town had never seen nor heard of before Wilson has about 60 legal voters, yet they piled up votes—full of them—for Boyne City. That's where the bulk of the $400 was expended in all probability.

—The Lebanon county sent light re sulted in a majority for removal. The Grand Traverse Herald however, under stands that the Leland people will not ask for the immediate removal of the county seat from Northport. It would cause unnecessary inconvenience the present county officers, and it is very probable that the removal will not take place until Jan. 1, 1883.

—At the Annual Meeting of the Charlevoix Summer Resort held in the parlors of the Belcroft House, Kalamazoo the following boarding Directors were chosen.

Peyton Ramsey, Pres.
D. B. Merrill—Vice Pres.
G. E. Burleson—Sec.
H. Woodbury—Treas.
Directors H. W. Pope,
S. A. Gibson,
H. F. Wetmore,
E. D. Bixby,
O. B. Allen.

—The Hobson castle recently mentioned in this paper as having been bought by Mr. Leach, arrived by the City of Traverse on Monday last. They are fine looking cattle and are probably as good of their kind as can be found in the county. The lot of 9, each two years old, and giving almost fabulous quantities of milk, are importations from Holland. The bull and one of the heifers are at the farm of W. H. Pike at Yuba, while the other heifer is in town and can be seen by calling on Mr. Leach. The importation of these cattle has awakened a lively interest among the farmers, which promises well for the future.—Grand Traverse Herald.

—Mr. J. A. Cameron, of the stage line at Boyne City, passed through the city yesterday on his way to Charlevoix from Mexico with a carload of 22 mules and another car of 24 graded stock horses. The cars were stood at the Union depot during the afternoon, and attracted much attention. The mules were fine looking animals. The horses were yet wild, only six of them having been "broken." Among them were a matched pair of an excellent team, and a beautiful black, said to have been raised by the champion bulls of Mexico. The horses will be taken to Charlevoix, and trained, after which they will be sold. The entire lot of mules and horses are valued at $8,000 or $4,000. They were on the road since April 3, and made good time.

Mr. Cameron had with him two genuine Mexican saddles, which he and his partner, J. M. Eaton, of Charlevoix, will use in training the animals. He also had a cowboy, or Mexican horse cat. It was a light brown color, and somewhat resembled a ferret. He will was 18 inches long, and caged black and white. A few exhibitions of skill in lasso throwing were given to the immense amusement of the admiring spectators. Mr. Cameron is a veteran in the horse business, having spent several years in Mexico and on West side care of stock. He has bought several loads of horses to this State.—Grand Rapids Valley.

—The Charlevoix Secretary of March 14th contains a list of the newly elected village officers, in which are found two names familiar to residents of Marshall. The president of the village is Wm. M. A. Smith, editor of the Sentinel, who made his first appearance with newspaper work in this office. A. R. Upright, son of Hon. N. P. Upright of Detroit, was elected a member of the board of village trustees. The following personal is taken from the Sentinel: A. R. Upright has purchased of W. H. Hartlan an undivided one-half interest in the north half of Lot [illegible] Charlevoix section adjoining this village, opposite court house square. It will be altered into building lots, and known as Hartlan & Upright's addition to the village of Charlevoix. It takes in what is known as the Taylor or Kehoe block, west of the state road. The owners are considered exceedingly lucky in securing the property, and there is no limit about their having a business.—Marshall Statesman.

Common Council.

The Village Council met Thursday even ng at the office of G. W. Crozier.

Petitions were received asking for sidewalks on the south side of Clinton street, from Bridge to Rose st. on the north side of Antrim street, from Bridge st. to Rose street, and from the bridge north to Nelson Ainslea residence on the east side of the street. They were referred to the sidewalk committee, who were also instructed to cause the repairs of certain walks on Clinton street.

A resolution was passed instructing the committee on ordinances to draft an ordinance prohibiting cattle from running at large from 8 o'clock a. m. to 5 o'clock p.m.

The special committee on park purchase asked further time, which was granted.

The council adopted a resolution to ease Odd Fellows Hall for the meetings of the council, at $10 per annum, lights, fuel, and janitor included.

Bill of W. A. Smith, printing sidewalk notices, park ballots, and for services on Board of Election, of $8.00; J. M. Clark, for services of records of Registration and Election, $3.00 were allowed.

The President announced the following standing committees for the year:

Streets and Sidewalks.—Nicholls, Miller and Upright.

Fires, their Prevention and Subjugation.—Miller, Upright and Cooper.

Ordinances and Printing.—Cooper, Upright and Seiss.

Public Buildings, Grounds, Waters and Navigation.—See, Crouter and Nicholls.

Claims and Finance.—Crouter, Cooper and See.

Ordinances.—See, Miller and Crouter.

Liberal Club.

Entertaining.

The lecture delivered by Mr. Carpenter before the Liberal Club on the 10th inst., contained many elements of entertainment and valued thought, it was written in a clear, bold and familiar manner, nothing being taken for granted, and the coaches' lons were drawn with accuracy. True, he had those who disagreed with him, but the diverse opinions, based upon facts of the lecturer, were not sufficient to overthrow the judgement formed by the greater portion of the audience. "Glances at the Past," the subject chosen, would occupy much space and time, to be fully commented upon, and Mr. Carpenter did justice to the subject considering the time at his disposal.

The next lecture of the season, and by the way, the last of the series, will be given by Frank Bisbee, on the 24th inst. Subject: "Man and his Relations." We heapeak for him a good attendance.

JESSE JAMES KILLED.

By Joseph, Mo., April 3.

A great sensation was created in this city this morning by the announcement that Jesse James, the notorious bandit and train robber, had been shot and killed here in St. Joseph. The news spread with great rapidity, but most people received it with doubts until investigation established the fact beyond question. Then the excitement became more and more intensive, and crowds of people rushed to that portion of the city where the shooting took place, anxious to view the body of the dead outlaw and learn the particulars.

It is a small frame shanty in the southeast part of the city, on the hill, not far from the World's Hotel, where Jesse has lived with his wife and two children since November last. Robert and Charles Ford, two of his gang, have made their headquarters at his house, and Charles, it is said has lived with him in that shanty ever since November. Robert arrived about two days ago, and the three have been making preparations for a raising expedition on which they intend to start tonight. James and the two Fords began to the front room together, about one this morning, the former took off his boots and laid his pistols on the bed, preparatory to with Robert Ford, who was to sit on the bed with his coat and took. He then pulled up a chair, with the intention of sitting down, but instead walked across the room to the wall. To do this he passed directly in front of Robert Ford, who, standing behind him, drew a 44-calibre revolver and fired a ball through the back of the outlaw's head, just behind the left ear. James fell heavily forward, and as he fell Robert Ford, who was standing just behind him, placed the muzzle of the weapon close to the back of the outlaw's head and fired a second ball. The first shot was sufficient to kill the bandit, but the second was fired to make sure that the work was done. The shots were heard by the family in the kitchen, but they, knowing that Jesse was in the habit of shooting at a mark in the house, paid no attention to the reports, supposing that he was merely practicing. Robert Ford rushed to the front door and called to his brother and friends that he had killed Jesse James, and that they were safe. Charles Ford, who was in the kitchen, then emerged from the house and ran to the side of his brother, and said: "Bob, you have killed the best man that ever lived." Robert Ford replied that he had done it for the reward, and that he was entitled to it. Charles Ford then said: "Let us get out of here as quickly as possible." Both men then left the house, and, mounting their horses, rode rapidly away. Mrs. James was in the house at the time of the killing, and when she saw her husband fall she rushed to his side, and, throwing herself upon his prostrate form, exclaimed: "They have murdered Jesse!" Then she arose to her feet and, rushing to the door, cried out: "Robert Ford has killed Jesse James!" Then she ran out into the street, and, meeting a man, she said: "Jesse James is my husband, and you have killed him!" She then returned to the house, and, throwing herself upon the bed, she gave way to her grief.

Mrs. James was in the act of washing two bottles, with a frightful grin upon his countenance, and apparently not aware of the presence of the officers. Behind him, on the wall, hung several fine horses, the property of Jesse. The Ford brothers claim that they have been living in Jesse's house for a long time. It is believed they were with James in the Gallatin bank robbery, and that they were influenced in killing him in the hope of getting the big reward which has been offered for the bandit's scalp, both by the Governor and by the express and railroad companies.

Charles Ford has been an associate of Jesse James since the fall of last November, and since that time has been with him almost constantly. He has been at his house, and has frequently visited the saloons with him. Robert Ford arrived here last Saturday a week ago, and accompanied Jesse James to Kansas City, returning to St. Joseph Tuesday. Jesse and the two Fords left here together for Kansas City, where they had several months until they cannot more whereabouts would be suspected. On Friday, the 28th, Jesse and the two Fords left Kansas City, and came to this city, where they had been living ever since. They were known here as Thomas Howard and Wood Hite, the former being Jesse and the latter Charles Ford. The Fords were known to Jesse's wife, but she was not aware that Jesse knew them to be the men who murdered Frank James' child while attempting to kill Frank's father-in-law, Judge Samuel, at Kearney, Clay County, Missouri, in 1875. Mrs. James was in the house when the shooting occurred, and was completely prostrated by the terrible tragedy. She was under the impression

He therefore declines to have his name used; but the Republicans of the district are inclined to force the honor upon him.

The Mr. Keeley, of Philadelphia, whose mysterious motor has been an object of interest to scientific and mechanical genius for several years, has been ordered by the courts to divulge to the stockholders of his concern the secret by which he can extract from a drop of water force enough to lift a ton. Mr. Keeley told the court that he would not obey its order, whereupon the court was indignant, and will punish Mr. Keeley for contempt. It is claimed that nearly a hundred thousand dollars have been wasted by Keely in his experiments, and the people who have been furnishing the money think they have been humbugged long enough.

Senator Henry M. Teller of Colorado, the new secretary of the interior, appointed in place of Mr. Kirkwood, was born in Allegany county, N. Y., in 1830. He studied law, was admitted to the bar, and soon after went to Illinois, where he practiced his profession from 1858 to 1861. In that year he removed to Colorado and engaged in silver mining. When the Centennial state was admitted into the Union he was elected senator for the short term, and a few days later was chosen for the term expiring March 3, 1885. He is a man of great force of character, honest, just, and will make a better secretary of the interior than any man since the time of Zachariah Chandler. Wm E. Chandler has been nominated as secretary of the navy in place of Mr. Hunt, who has been appointed minister to Russia. Mr. C. is a man of great energy and ability, of high integrity, and will make a much better secretary of the navy than Mr. Hunt, who lacked executive ability. Mr. Chandler supported Mr. Blaine for the presidency both in the Cincinnati and Chicago conventions.

The immigration to the United States this year bids fair to be even larger than that of last year, which was beyond all precedent. The greater part of the emigrants are coming to the Northwest, and parties of six and eight hundred arrive in Dakota and Minnesota nearly every day.

The location of public lands in the North-west by settlers this spring is beyond all precedent. Large colonies are going from the Eastern States to Minnesota, Nebraska, and Dakota to grow up with the country. The probability that Dakota will be admitted to the Union as a State has drawn a great many people to that Territory to buy town lots and farms. The acreage under cultivation in Dakota this year will, it is estimated, be fully double that of last.

The public debt statement for March shows a reduction of the interest-bearing debt for that month of $16,862,946; and a reduction since the first of July last of $114,282,300. The total interest-bearing debt is now $1,344,752,760. The Treasury officials say that the current fiscal year will be the most notable in the history of the country, so far as the reduction of the debt is concerned. Already $115,000,000 of bonds have been redeemed and destroyed, and before the end of the year it is believed this amount will reach nearly $130,000,000.

NEWS SUMMARY.

Important Intelligence from All Parts.

Congressional.

In the Senate on the 8th Mr. Hoar reported favorably from the committee on the Manchester Canal Company of Newcastle. A joint resolution was offered and laid on the table, providing for the appointment of a number in Illinois, Indiana and Ohio to inspect the Ohio river from Pittsburgh to the St. Louis & Southeastern road. Mr. Hoar introduced a bill to amend the charter of the Potomac River Steamboat Company. Mr. Sherman moved to take up the bill to provide for the payment of the awards of the Geneva tribunal. Mr. Edmunds moved to amend by striking out the provision that when any officer has served thirty-five years he may apply to the President and be placed on the retired list, and if he has served forty years he shall receive three-fourths of his salary. Mr. Sherman opposed the amendment, and said that the provision was not confined to persons of long service. Mr. Morgan's motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations was carried on the question of passage the bill was passed. Mr. Morgan's motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations was carried on the question of passage the bill was passed. Mr. Morrill introduced a bill to provide for the permanent location of the seat of government. Referred. Mr. Morgan spoke in favor of the bill which he had introduced providing for the recognition of Mexico. Mr. Edmunds said he was willing to vote for the bill, but he thought it would be better to wait until the Mexican Commission had reported. Mr. Morgan said he was willing to wait. The bill was then referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Mr. Sherman introduced a resolution providing for the payment of the awards of the Geneva tribunal. Referred. The Senate then went into executive session and soon adjourned.

In the Senate on the 9th Mr. Cameron presented a memorial from the Legislature of Wisconsin against using the Bland-Allison silver coinage act for the redemption of bonds. Mr. Sherman said he introduced a bill supporting the same principle. Mr. Windom introduced a bill providing for the payment of the awards of the Geneva tribunal. Mr. Hoar introduced a bill to amend the act providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the Chinese question. Referred. An amendment was adopted increasing from $2,000 to $3,000 the salary of the Librarian of Congress. Mr. Morgan's resolution providing for the recognition of the Government of Mexico was adopted. Mr. Edmunds introduced a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of three Senators to investigate the charges of corruption, soliciting of bribes, etc., made against Senators. Referred. The bill was then taken up.

Much excitement prevailed at Cadillac over the removal of the county seat of Wexford county from Manton to that city. Early on Monday morning a few prominent citizens chartered a special train and went after the books, safe and chattels belonging to the county to take them to their future resting place. The Mantonites refused to give up the property, claiming that the change of the county seat had been accomplished by fraud. Not being strong enough in numbers the deputation returned for reinforcements. On the second trip about 300 men went up. Storms used to take it by force when they could not obtain by argument. When so large a force appeared, the citizens of Manton, thinking that discretion was the better part of valor, with very poor grace gave up the property, which was then brought to Cadillac. At the depot, the train was met by every man, woman and child that did not go to make up the 300. The books and safe were conducted to the office with great rejoicing and by a large procession. No blood was shed, but a great amount of ill-feeling was engendered.

Democratic demagogism, and opposition papers generally, are trying to make political capital out of the fact that President Arthur vetoed the anti-Chinese immigration bill, which he considered in direct violation of the provisions of the treaty recently concluded with China through the efforts of Minister Angell. The real basis of the veto was the clause suspending immigration for 20 years, when the provisions of the treaty authorized a temporary suspension. Officers, the president found other and strong objections to the bill, notably the passport requirements and the skilled labor provisions, but it is generally acknowledged that the prohibition of immigration outright for merely a generation was the principal ground on which he refused his approval. James B. Angell, who negotiated the treaty, in an interview with a correspondent of the Post and Tribune, says when he first conferred with the Chinese they spoke of limitations of time and number, but afterward all they only intended the use of that expression by way of illustration, as for instance saying what would be the result if the Chinese were permitted to come only in alternate years, or were prohibited from coming for one, two, or three years? They were also anxious to know what action congress would be likely to take in the premises? In reply to this the American embassy replied that they could not tell, but they wished to make a treaty which should impose reasonable restrictions. Personally, President Angell thinks the 20 years limit too long, and thinks he would have voted against it had he been in congress. From his present standing point he would not like to see a treaty for a shorter restriction. The Californians are almost a unit against Chinese immigration, and if the people of other states were similarly situated, they would probably be of the same opinion. So long as Chinamen refuse to become Americanized there is danger to America's institutions, and as a republican congressman we willingly take steps should be taken to remedy the evil, but there ought to be an objection of treaty obligations. Senator Edmunds of Vermont, who voted against the measure, would have supported a ten years limitation, and there is every reason to believe that President Arthur would approve a bill so modified as to bring the time of limitation, passport requirements, and the skilled labor provisions into harmony with his views. A majority of the republican party believe that Chinese immigration ought to be regulated, restrained, or even suspended, but they do not believe that it should be prohibited outright for merely a generation.—Lansing Republican.

A good harvest in that country means—which is generally anticipated—it will flow pleasantly at enlarged "good fellowship" for the future. Our general prosperity is chiefly dependant upon good crops.

Queen Victoria is rapidly growing old in appearance, and her health is more infirm than the least price of England seems to make known to the world. Her visit to Mentone is because of her increasing feebleness, and in all probability, there will be a change in the English throne in the course of the next two years.

The Change in Southern Politics.

The principal argument which the Bourbons of the Southern States advance in favor of their continued rule is that their overthrow will result in the renewal of that condition of affairs which prevailed in the years that followed immediately upon reconstruction. They point to the abuse of power of such men as Moses, of South Carolina, the squandering of public funds, and the general mismanagement which it must be admitted existed in some States, as the situation that anti-Bourbon success will revive. There were two classes of men that went to the South from the North after the war. One of them went for the purpose of honestly furthering their fortunes. The other put on the garb of Republicanism and entered politics from motives that were unmixed with patriotism. They found at their hand a large class of newly enfranchised citizens, necessarily ignorant and inexperienced in the methods having part in public affairs. Notwithstanding the disadvantages that every intelligent man must have known existed in the case, the unprincipled adventurer entered into unrestrained alliance with this ignorant material.

The cry of complaint in this case was the Stock law that discriminates against the negroes and poorer classes generally, and the legislation in the new States is mostly framed on that negro suffrage basis. The political situation in the South is that of division among two well-bred Southern white gentlemen, and the other of the Bourbons to make it appear that it is a set of unprincipled adventurers that are responsible for enhancing to get in power, is not based on anything like facts. It is as flagrantly untrue that it will not avail long.

What was hopefully predicted some time ago with respect to the Solid South has come to pass. The Democratic solidity was so great that it had to crack, and a healthy disintegration has set in. It is now a year before the Democratic party of the national canvass take definite shape, but elements that are most at work in working up must be led to believe that in a small degree it exists in the Southern States is in the way of being established, and that the possession of the ballot by the negro is hopeless. Thus are the deserved guilts of promoting his rights.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

—A small boy of five months, in Kingsville, Ohio, is a prodigy of a speller, is said to walk and talk "like a little man." Indeed, the correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer asserts that its mind is as well developed as the average child of twelve years old, and that he "has thought and observation of minds and moves, remarkably rapid developments of mental faculties seldom witnessed."

—Mr. Gould's pleasant way of stepping in and ordering every telegraph enterprise that pops, has set about the discussion of a Government telegraph which, in Rochester, (N. Y.) Express thinks the people are fast getting ready for.

The South Carolina Frauds.

The object of the proceedings began in South Carolina, under the direction of Attorney-General Brewster, is to bring to justice the men who willfully and notoriously defrauded the people of that State of their rights at the polls. In this case it is not necessary to urge intimidation and violence to prove the downright iniquity of the election returns. There has never been in the history of the country, since the election frauds in Kansas, during border-ruffian rule, any invasion of the right of suffrage so open as this. The success of the Democrats during the last Gubernatorial election just previous to that of 1880 so emboldened them that they resolved to cheat the owners of the State without compunction or attempt at concealment. A well-organized system of ballot-box stuffing was conceived and put into operation. Tissue paper ballots were printed and shipped into the States in vast numbers. To such an extent was this carried that it was found necessary to make the ballot box lead boxes overshoe. In other words, in their eagerness to stuff the boxes, the managers put in more tissue paper ballots than could have been voted honestly, provided every legal voter in the precinct had deposited one ballot. Then began the process of drawing out the superfluous ballots, in order that the ballots should tally with the number of votes returned. That this extraordinary proceeding was common, and was considered entirely legal, by the managers can deny.

If anything could vitiate a poll, it would be an outrage of this sort. To open the boxes and take out the ballots by the dozen, no matter what might be the character of the ballots withdrawn and destroyed, is sufficient to make void the election so far as that poll is concerned. And to show that this tampering with the ballot-boxes was universal, it is only needful to refer to the action of the Democratic Executive Committee in the premises. That body, being informed that the United States Supervisor had instructed his subordinates to report if any ballots had been withdrawn, and if so, how many, issued a peremptory order directing the County Committees not to allow the Supervisors to see or inspect any ballots drawn from the box in excess of the number polled. And so it fastens upon themselves conclusive proof of their guilty participation in the fraud, the committee instructed the County Committee men further that "the ballots must be withdrawn without being seen." In accordance with these orders enough ballots were withdrawn to make the showing appear fair and to give large majorities to the Democratic candidates. In the Charleston district, where the most glaring frauds were committed, even these efforts were not successful, and the returns showed Republican majorities. In all such cases the figures were obviously falsified, and the County Canvassers sought to make it appear that they were returning officers. That this was the practice, both as to forgery, similar to that practiced by one of their after experiences. The anti-Bourbon party of to-day is composed of reputable white men, who have suffered of ring monopoly, who reject the base proposition and who are alive to the real interests of the South. Here and there a demagogue is mixed in among them, but that is the case in all political movements. The Bourbons have also learned much in ten years. They have taken good deal to acquire yet before they can master the intelligent workers of the franchise, but they are far from being the raw material they were. At present they are not ambitious of high political honors from the North, but they are politically allied with Southern men who were formerly Bourbon supporters, and how long it will be the time has come when a change of rulers will be a blessing.

The personal character of Senator Mahone is quite up to that of the average Virginian politician, and his political genius will compare very favorably in that respect with Ben Hill. The issues on which the lately defeated Independent ticket in Mississippi were rather more radical, if anything, than those on the other. A South Carolina gentleman expressed himself recently to a newspaper man to this effect:

"If, as I have supposed, a few true I will never vote for either Democrats to-day as long as I live. I will either stand as a poor white man with the negro governments that were built up in South Carolina then to direct my efforts toward keeping up an anti-negro party, or I will vote with the Democratic party and help to perpetuate upon the same principles that not only it but my self and my children are reduced to the most horrible misery from which there is no possible relief."

The fact is, that the Bourbons have not changed their policy. They are the same people who have defrauded at the expense of the State. So ought the Governor of Tennessee, had he been so minded, have refused to issue the commissions of Rast Tennessee to defeated by the Secessionists brought to trial in the United States District Court. The action of the Governor is a virtual recognition of the fact that the Senate packed ballot and the falsification of election returns are peculiar institutions of the State, and must be defended by the same law officers of the sovereign State of South Carolina. Whether the Governor will invoke the militia to prevent the punishment of the offenders, if they are proved to be guilty, is another question. To be consistent, Governor Hagood should persist, even to this extremity, in his attempt to nullify the laws of the United States.—N. Y. Times.

—Washington dispatches state that no Cabinet meeting has been held as yet to be attended by the Senate. This is a mistake. Roger B. Taney, nominated Secretary of the Treasury by President Jackson in 1833, was not confirmed by the Senate. James M. Porter, nominated for Secretary of War by Tyler, was rejected by the Senate in March, 1843, and David Henshaw, nominated for Secretary of the Navy to Tyler, was rejected by the Senate in July, 1843.—Chicago Journal.

—Procter, the astronomer, has brought forward a new subject of worry. He says that by careful calculation he finds that 150,000,000 years from now the days will be 24 hours long. How dim comparing for seeking people!

Naming the Baby.

"I think," said the fond mother, "that as the baby's last name is Brown it would be better to give him some first name less common than Henry? There are eleven columns of Henry Browns in the directory."

"Thirteen, darling," said Mr. Brown; "I counted them yesterday. What we want for the baby is a unique first name —a name that will make it possible always to identify him. Isn't that it, dearest?"

"Certainly."

"Well, I have prepared a list from which we can pick. Suppose we skim over it? Let's begin with the twelve tribes of Israel. Are there any among them that you like?"

"I think not."

"How would Gad do? Gad Brown! That would be novel, anyhow."

"But no; startling, perhaps."

"Possibly. The others are all rather common. Does Ivanhoe strike you? I rather like Rowlston Brown. Or, if we wanted to give him a middle name we could call him Ivanhoe Alcibiades Brown."

"It is too long, and, besides, I'm not certain I could spell Alcibiades correctly in marking his underclothing."

"Plutarch, then?"

"Mr. Brown, that's outrageous!"

"Outrageous, love! Plutarch! Why what do you mean?"

"No child of mine shall ever be named after the god of the infernal regions!"

Mr. Brown examined his list, and passed on. "What do you say, then, to Galileo? There is but a single Galileo Brown in the directory."

"Was Galileo an Israelite?"

"No, love, I think not."

"I thought from his name perhaps he came from Galilee," said Mrs. Brown, thoughtfully.

Mr. Brown was too much astonished to reply. He could only contemplate the ceiling of his bath.

"Delilah is a Scriptural name. Would you care for Delilah? Delilah Brown?"

"I think not," said Mrs. Brown. "It sounds like an imputation upon our child's veracity. I don't think we ought to start him in life with an inclination that he will be a story-teller."

"It might not be right. Suppose then, we call him Pharaoh?"

"Is that a Bible name?"

"No, love, not a Bible name."

"To be sure not; I was thinking of St. Peter. I think, William, I should prefer an American name of some kind if we could find one."

"Patrick Henry, for example?"

"That is Irish."

"No; you know Patrick Henry was an American. He was a gentleman; why don't you remember?"

"I may seem very stupid, but I always had the idea, somehow, that there were some one named Patrick and the other Henry."

Mrs Brown concealed his feelings and said that he was right.

"I have a few Aztec names," said he, after having gone over his list, "which are marked by strong individuality. Tezcomoco, for instance. He was an Aztec King."

"Was he? Just name Brown?"

"I think not. No, I am certain it wasn't, and there was Nezahualcoyotl: he was a King, too."

"Our child could never put such a name as that on an individuality basis."

"True," said Mr. Brown. "Tlaloc probably had no umbrella. Spotted Tail, however, is a native American name, which—"

"I don't know. Spotted Tail Brown might answer for——"

Mrs. Brown suddenly flirted out of the room with a handkerchief, saying she was going home to her mother's. Mr. Brown sat down, sighed, and folded up his list and agreed to call the child Thomas.—Our Continent.

The Superstitions of Fishermen.

Of the numerous other practices in use among the fishing fraternity for securing good luck, we are told that on the highest mound of the hill above Westonsuper-Mare is a heap of stones, to which every fisherman in his daily walk to Sand Bay, Kewstoke, contributes a stone toward his day's good fishing. A curious custom was, in years gone by, observed at Filey in connection with the herring fishery. During the time the fishing season were at sea the parish priest on behalf of the inhabitants seized all the unemployed wagons and carts they could find and, dragged them down to the shore at the cliff's top, leaving them to be escored and taken away by their respective owners on the following morning. This was done about the third Saturday night after the boats had sailed from Filey, under a superstitious notion that it drove the herrings into the nets. In Cornwall it is considered unlucky by fishermen for any one to meet a jolt-headed or, indeed, any kind of fish—on the road downward, as such an act is said to be sure to turn the luck of the day to "fish from the coast." The proper way is to start him in life with an inclination that he will be a story-teller."

"It might not be right. Suppose then, we call him Pharaoh?"

"Is that a Bible name?"

"No, love, not a Bible name."

"To be sure not; I was thinking of St. Peter. I think, William, I should prefer an American name of some kind if we could find one."

How a Sale of Henry Clay was Paid.

Mr. John Wentworth in a recent lecture on Henry Clay told the following story: Mr. Clay had a large and expensive family, and he keenly felt his poverty, while he lost no opportunity of expressing his gratitude to friends, known and unknown, for all kinds of favors. They often met with Mr. Wingate aside his celebrated speech, in Maysville, Ky., he was lighting a cigar at dinner when some one asked him if he did not think Mr. Webster's influence had been greatly impaired by his alliance with certain wealthy men in Massachusetts to secure a large appropriation for the cleaning up his practice in the courts so as to be able to spend more time in politics. And Clay responded: "In view of the manner in which my name was paid at a meeting in Boston, I think I ought to speak upon that subject. With difficulty I had raised the funds to pay the interest when I went to the bank to ask a renewal. The cashier told me I had no note there, and I asked him what had become of it, and he said he was informed I had been relieved from the debt. I was supposed you had something to do with it, and I said, 'No, sir.' He then responded: 'Whether I or any one else had anything to do with the matter you were the man,' and I replied, 'Not to my knowledge.' Mr. Clay then said: "In view of my many opponents, I am thankful for the memory as the money, but, when I am free from public life, I am going to invest my own money when I am going to invest my own money when I am going to invest my own money when and are in a part of the State unequaled for health and scenery, and unsurpassed as to the good fruit-growing class of the soil, and the mildness of the climate.

WATER AND RAIL,

The Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad runs through a part of them.

The pet-Lot Michigan in which these lands are situated is

NOT A WILDERNESS, BY ANY MEANS.

It contains a population of two HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND souls and is rapidly filling up with skilled farm-classed every State in the Union.

Over 200,000 acres of the lands of this great tract have already been sold.

NEWS SUMMARY.

Important Intelligence from All Parts.

CONGRESSIONAL.

In the Senate on the 10th a bill was passed to prevent Captain Collins from retiring on half the pay, with restoration to the line every day he was absent without leave. The Indian Appropriation bill was reported with numerous amendments in succession. On the 11th the House resumed its bill appropriating $25,151 for loans for sundry claims by Hamilton and Jefferson Institutions. In the Senate the Indian appropriation bill was passed. The Senate then took up the bill to provide for the payment of the Texas Indians. In the Senate on the 12th the Indian bill was passed. In committee of the House on the Naval Appropriation bill a Senate amendment was concurred in to increase to $50,000 the salary of Lieutenant Greely, but the proposition to restore the framing of ships of wood, defeated in the Senate, was pushed to fight for the consideration of the House.

In the Senate on the 13th the bill relating to the Southern Ohio agricultural lands in Utah was amended to allow the Indians to remain on their reservations as long as and was then passed. A bill was passed to refer to the Court of Claims the claim of Mrs. Sarah Dorsey for legal services in the matter of sugar plantations to Louisiana by General Butler. In 1862. Mr. Small presented a petition from officers of the Dacotah, praying for the passage of the bill for the compulsory education of Indian children. Then in the House bills were introduced to provide for the payment of the expenses of the Chicago and Cincinnati encampments therewith, for the construction of the Delaware & Maryland Railroad, and to prevent National Banks from loaning money and using the notes of the banks on the faith of the bonds deposited in the Treasury. A bill was passed to refer to the Court of Claims the claim of Mrs. Sarah Dorsey for services in the matter of the Louisiana sugar plantations. Mr. Page introduced a bill to regulate the immigration of Chinese and the importation of foreigners.

In the Senate on the 14th Mr. Cameron, Pa., presented a petition from the United States Bank of the late Indian American organization for the improvement of American citizens in Ireland.

A bill was passed for the assessment of the claims growing out of the destruction of the private armed brig Argo, Jr., in 1813 by a British war vessel. Mr. McMillan made a favorable report on the claim of the heirs of Commodore Barron to prevent the abatement of the claim against the estate of Commodore Barron. Mr. Sawyer made to the appropriation bill an amendment providing for the construction of the Delaware & Maryland Railroad, and to prevent National Banks from loaning money and using the notes of the banks on the faith of the bonds deposited in the Treasury. A bill was passed to refer to the Court of Claims the claim of Mrs. Sarah Dorsey for services in the matter of the Louisiana sugar plantations. Mr. Page introduced a bill to regulate the immigration of Chinese and the importation of foreigners.

CHARLEVOIX, APRIL 27, 1882.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

The Close of Volume Thirteen of the Sentinel.

This week the SENTINEL closes the thirteenth volume of its existence and next week steps out upon the fourteenth year unblushingly, cheerfully, proudly.

As we look back over the past years of our journal's career, even its infancy of discouraging struggles, and later, its victories and its successes, we are conscious of a feeling of pride, that through it all from its initial number to its present, we have been permitted by a kind providence to detect its labors, and dictate its policies.

The SENTINEL has made its mistakes, as all agencies under human government will do, but no man can say it has not worked faithfully and well for the good of its party, and better, if possible, for the permanent good of its town and county.

However much the incoming tide seen may ignore the accomplished results of its labors in the past, we are not backward in asserting that much of the growth, and development of all parts of our county are the fruits of its faithful labors when even against the opposing influences of circulation is steadily increasing, and business men recognize its usefulness as a medium through to reach the eyes of their customers.

The SENTINEL thanks its patrons for their friendship in the past, and pledges itself to prove itself worthy of their continued confidence.

Capt. Phillip Caffrey Drowned.

On Monday a dispatch was received from the south shore that Capt. Phillip Caffrey, of the small schooner Fair Play, was drowned. He left here early last week with hay for Ford River, and barge for Beaver Island and his return was looked for when the news of his death was wired to his widow. No particulars of his death are given. Capt. Caffrey but a few months ago was married to a daughter of Jas. Martin of this place, upon whom the blow falls with severity. He was a good sailor and a reputable, straightforward man.

Later—A letter from Joseph Papineau, who was a sailor on the Fair Play, states that Capt. Caffrey went ashore at Milloux quins River on the 18th, and had not been seen since. From this it would appear that he may have come to his death some other way than by drowning.

A Few Words in Regard to Sanitary Precautions:

Investigation has always proven that the primary causes of those dread diseases which at intervals come among us, are imperfect drainage, impure cellars, and the accumulation of garbage about back yards. These, although it may be sometimes almost imperceptible, give off vapors which creep into our nostrils and lungs, depositing those poisonous germs which breed typhoid fever and diphtheria. They are fruitful sources for epidemics. There are things that were settled long before scientific men gave the subject or sanitation much attention, and common sense teaches us that one of these things is, that in order to preserve health it is necessary to prevent or remove nuisances, especially when they are confined to a limited space. There is often a great indifference manifested on the part of some to the prolific causes of disease, accasted by the return of spring, excited by the impetus it gives to business, the farmer takes no thought of the conditions of health but leaves his cellar or out house to take care of itself and the family to take care of themselves. And the filth soon breeds a pestilence in the house. Diphtheria and typhoid fevers have unquestionably originated directly from filth in thousands of cases and been propagated by the same. Notwithstanding these diseases prevail in localities where drainage is good and in high elevations. Where strict cleanliness is maintained it is evident that foul material is highly detrimental and against which scientists in such diseases, and every physician's experience would corroborate. One of the duties of every house holder in the spring is to make a thorough overhauling of his cellar, yard and outhouse buildings, removing everything that has a tendency to decay, using disinfectants where there is any danger from decaying matter. A few pounds of a cabbage leaf in a cellar may infect it and prove a dangerous bane to health.

We are confident that by remove the immunity Charlevoix has enjoyed from these epidemics has been due to our pure air and water, and the absence of mechanisms in the particulars which we have enumerated. But with growth come inevitable evils and these are among them. They exist here, and their abatement should be prompt and effectual. Barns and cellars should be kept clean, garbage should be buried, drainage improved, and our harbor docks and frontage kept free from nuisances.

We hope our citizens will unite to thus promote the healthfulness of our beautiful village.

A strong feeling exists among the Republicans of this Senatorial District that Hon. Archibald Bertrice shall be chosen successor. It is a rare thing for a man to step from an active business life into a more successful career of public duty than has Mr. Bertrice as Senator of the 31st. He has indulged in no windy platitudes, but by his good, intelligent common sense, his solid and substantial way of doing things, his practical manner of dealing with men, his consistency and sterling reputation, won the respect of his associates and an enviable status among the prominent public men of Michigan. The District cannot do a wiser act than to return him to the Senate.

Hashings from Hayes—By Oisk.

Lost Hope entered one of his fingers while feeding wood the last week.

A Rose has not found a new champion mower, and walks cute.

Did you know there were two legged swine as well as quadrupeds of that kind? Well there are.

There were no casualties reported in Hayes. There were four "contraband" elected and one man refused to qualify as "contraband."

Little Sammy Webster, son of U. S. Webster, was badly burned last Monday. His clothing caught fire and before he could be relieved his legs were burned from the feet almost to his body. He is doing as well as could be expected.

The latest thing we have heard from political centers is in the case of a school district where there were only two parties in the case, and in order to have all the votes possible, parties are making deeds to an acre or two of land to their wives and daughters in order to make them voters at school meeting and thus carry their measures.

Hayes have a mild or cough of any kind just a bottle of Hill's Peerless Cough Syrup. Cures all, if not satisfied return the empty bottle and I will refund your money. Take all the Peerless Worm Syrup on the same terms. No cure no pay.

—Alden Chamberlain this week purchased the schooner M. W. Wright, and the town minstrel, Solomon Watts Sherman, Mr. Chamberlain is now the most extensive vessel owner in town.

—The Boyne City paper lashes Geo. F. Hendelger for his constitutional sigardli ness in matters of public enterprise. He evidently has not recovered from the effect of that $200 subscription yet.

—The wrecking schooner Experiment was in port this week transfering the capstan, anchor, chain and some of the rigging of the schooner Pratt, which was wrecked on the Manitous last fall.

—The steamers are improving the condition of the mouth of the harbor very materially. The propellers Lawrence and Truesdell now experience no difficulty in going out with a draft of eleven feet.

—Dr. A. B. Spinney, of Detroit, will be at the Fountain City House in this place Wednesday and Thursday, 17, and 18, for the treatment of all chronic diseases, but especially of the eye and ear.

—Chas. Kobuske, of Traverse City, has purchased the Aldmone property, on the north side of the river, for $2,000. We are told that he intends to remove here and erect a three story brick building on the lot.

—Alden Chamberlain, of this place has purchased the tug Bob Stephenson from the Pine Lake Iron Co., for the consideration of $1,900. He takes possession of her in two weeks, and will bring her here to do harbor towing.

—J. M. Clark, of this place, has purchased the corner lot of Upright & Hurlburt's addition, lying on the east of Court house hill and will erect a two story building 24x50 in size. His law office will occupy a portion of it.

—Fred W. Mayne, on Monday established himself as an attorney in Charlevoix. He has rented the law office so long occupied by J. M. Clark, on Bridge street. He will do a general collection, law, and real estate business.

—It is gratifying to note the activity of travel in this direction on the Pine Lake steamers. The circumstance serves to illustrate the fact which we have so often stated, that Charlevoix is and always will be the commercial centre of the Pine Lake region.

—A mysterious explosion which shook the earth for miles around occurred on Fox island a few weeks ago, and investigation showed that a strip of land comprising several acres had been torn from the top of a bluff and thrown four or five hundred feet to the beach below.

—S. B. Patterson, Superintendent of the Pine Lake Iron Company's furnace, has resigned his position to take effect May 15th. He will return to his former home in New Jersey. Mr. Patterson is a pleasant and companionable gentleman, and will be missed by his acquaintances here.

—The Cheboygan people have not given up their search for salt. The delay has been on account of a desire to preserve larger tubing which it is thought best to use, so that if rotten rock is struck again they will be able to overcome the difficulty. They expect to be equipped in a couple of weeks.

—It perhaps may be unnecessary to state that the ordinance prohibiting drunkenness and brawling on the streets of Charlevoix will be strictly enforced. Those who have so much money to spend for whiskey must contribute a portion of their wealth to the public purse, unless they choose to be orderly about it.

—Richard Cooper has leased the Fountain City House and restrants for one year to E. F. Wheeler, of Petoskey, who will take possession the 20th. Mr. Cooper gets $1,200 rent for the year. Dick's familiar face will be missed in the place he has filled so long, but it is a satisfaction to know that he is not to leave town.

—Maxwell's Theatre is advertised to appear at Leslie Hall in this place, on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, May 15, 16 and 17. The well known reputation of this company is a sufficient guarantee that one people will be favored with a rare dramatic treat. The company is spoken of by our exchanges as embracing fine talent, and possessing a repertoire of plays of a high order.

COMMON COUNCIL.

The Liquor Bonds—List of Village Officers Elected.

Council met Thursday evening, April 27, with President and full Board present.

Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

The Marshal reported certain sidewalks incomplete, and others defective, and he was instructed to cause their immediate construction and repair.

The Committee on ordinances reported an ordinance prohibiting cattle running at large at night, which was adopted.

The Sidewalk Committee reported that the petitions for sidewalks on the north side of Antrim street, and the south side of Clinton, lacked the signatures of a majority of the resident lot owners.

The special committee on the purchase of a park reported progress and asked for further time, which was granted.

A motion to fix the liquor bonds at $5,000 was carried by the following vote:

Yeas—The President, Trustees Miller, Sea and Upright. Nays, Cooper, Crouter and Nicholls.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President pro tem.—Hon. John Nicholls
Marshal—A. J. McLeod.
Fire Warden—J. M. Clark.
Harbor Master—The Marshal.
Street Commissioner—Geo. W. Cook.
Health Officer—Dr. Preston.

Permission was granted Trustee Crouter to build a crosswalk on Bridge street at his place of business.

The liquor bond of Chas. A. Newton, with Richard Cooper as sureties, was pronounced.

Moved and carried that when the Council do adjourn it be until Monday evening, at which the consideration of liquor bonds will be made a special order.

Permission was granted to construct the sidewalk on Newman street to conform to the natural formation of the ground as the grade is established.

Adjourned.

SPECIAL MEETING.

Council met on Monday evening, pursuant to adjournment.

Committee on Ordinances instructed to prepare ordinances prohibiting temporary or permanent obstruction of sidewalks, and requiring of $50 license by saloon keepers.

The motion fixing the liquor bonds at $5,000 was reconsidered, and the bonds fixed at $1,000.

The liquor bond of Gellick & Ingalls, with T. D. Smith and Nelson Ainslie as sureties, was presented.

The bonds of Gellick & Ingalls and Chas S. Newton were then approved.

Adjourned.

We notice that some of our exchanges are advocating the nomination of Hon. Wm Crosby, of Harbor Springs for Secretary of State, to which we say, go in boys, and old in doing a good thing. Mr. Crosby has already reached the state eminent services, is a man of sterling character, and unquestioned ability. His fitness for the position is so well known and generally acknowledged, that no position his selection.

Ensilage.

This word, which is only a few years old, grows out of the discovery made by a Frenchman, Auguste Goffart, that green crops, when stored in water-tight pits called silos, under a heavy pressure, do not rot, but are preserved fresh and sweet, and retain all their nutritive juices for a year or more; and that when offered to cattle in this condition, in the winter, are preferred to any dry food. It hardly requires that the discovery made a sensation among farmers and cattle-feeders in this country, and that there is exhibited a keen desire to know all about it; for, not only can a great deal more nutriment be stored away than dry, be raised on an acre, but assuringly possesses the advantage of supplying cattle with succulent, summer food in the winter—an advantage of great value to milch cattle. Any green crop that stock are fond of when in a growing state is good ensilage—grass, clover, rye, young corn, sorghum and vegetables, but corn, clover and the grasses are the most generally used, and when growing they are full of juice, which is lost in curing into hay or fodder, but preserved in the silo. Several kinds of green crops may be packed in the same silo, and the ensilage is said to be improved by the variety. Corn, either drilled or planted in seven broadcast, and cut in its most juicy condition, is the basis of most ensilage experiments in this country. It may be packed in the same silo with clover or grass of any kind, and, indeed, almost any crops of corn may be planted for maturer with different kinds of grasses in their season. It is estimated that ten to twenty tons weight of green crops may be cut from an acre of good soil—five to ten times as much as the weight of a dry crop of grain or hay—it is easy to see how much more profitable it is to raise green crops in the form of ensilage than in the form of hay, or in the dry. Col. J. W. Wolcott of Boston, who owns a farm near that city, says: "I found I could get more nutriment from growing fourteen tons to the acre—last year, by ensilage, than I could from growing fourteen tons to the acre—last year, by ensilage, than I could from growing twenty-eight tons per acre. The cost will be lessened as much as twenty, and one man will be saved. On one piece of ground he gathered thirty-one tons per acre, but that corn was fourteen feet high. At this rate I estimated that ten to twenty tons weight of green crops may be cut from an acre of good soil—five to ten times as much as the weight of a dry crop of grain or hay—it is easy to see how much more profitable it is to raise green crops in the form of ensilage than in the form of hay, or in the dry. Col. J. W. Wolcott of Boston, who owns a farm near that city, says: "I found I could get more nutriment from growing fourteen tons to the acre—last year

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

GLIMPSES AT GREAT MEN.

The Students' Lecture Season at the Northwestern University.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

It has been my good fortune to see and hear upon the rostrum, during the past few months, some of America's representative speakers. The platform is not the best place to form a correct estimate of a person's general character and influence and yet, I venture to say, any one possessing sufficient ability to appear before an Evanston audience in the character of a public lecturer, will require no further mention by me concerning his knowledge and attainments.

The students' lecture course has always been one of rare excellence, but I feel safe in asserting that no former course of lectures gave such universal satisfaction as the one presented during the past winter.

The first of the number was Dr. A. A. Wilkes, of Philadelphia, whose subject "The Sunshine of a Happy Life." He was introduced by Hon. Dr. Hatfield, an old acquaintance and friend. Dr. Wilkes is a man of medium height, finely proportioned, and possessing such a genial countenance that one might easily determine the nature of his subject, had it not been announced. He began by pointing out the many different dispositions to be met with in society. Some, whose lives were continually in opposition to the world, who saw nothing but gloom and shadows, and who usually succeeded admirably in making every one around them miserable. Then there were others who could discover in their neighbors no redeeming trait of character whatever. Their existence was passed in criticising and censuring the world in general. If, on a beautiful spring morning, when all nature when all nature seemed to be rejoicing in her new-found beauty, and the very hills appeared to break forth into singing, you should approach such a person as described and enthusiastically remind him of the glorious springtime, and of the bright day which had just dawned, he would no doubt answer you that it was only a "weather breeder." And then, if not already discouraged, you should point to the sun in heaven and remark that that distant luminary which clothed the early flower in its beautiful and variegated tints, and which gave to man, beast, and all animate life the strength and life necessary for an existence, must certainly call forth his admiration, this unreasonable individual would tell you of the number of spots which the astronomers found on the sun's surface last year.

Opposed to such morbid excrescences of society were those whose very presence carried light and sunshine to all with whom they came in contact, who preferred to count their blessings before adversities, and to adopt the philosophical plan of viewing trouble, which the good old lady employed, who in the weekly class-meetings would say, "Christian friends, I've got lots of trials and troubles, but they don't trouble me much."

President Joseph Cummings is a man possessing an admirable physical frame, and noted as one of the most successful educators in the country. He has recently been called to officiate as President of the Northwestern University, and he will not fail to meet the great expectations of the school. He lectured on "The Progress of Liberty," tracing the development of freedom from England to America, and its growth during the past century. He likened the modern politicians to serpents winding their slimy folds about the pillars of government, hissing at those who, of purer mind and loftier patriotism, dared to oppose their nefarious schemes. He closed with quoting Longfellow's beautiful lines:

"Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!"

Alfred P. Rathbone is a good specimen of what this country is producing in the public readers. His rendering of "Rip Van Winkle" was excellent, and the many bursts of hearty applause during the entertainment, attested in a marked degree the appreciation of his audience.

Dr. Gerard of Baltimore, is universally known as an eloquent and persuasive speaker. His subject was, "Is the Bible an Immoral Book?" He stated that the well established facts in science, philosophy and religion, were now constantly questioned. Many of these doubts could not now be satisfactorily answered, but that fact alone is not an argument which proves that the skeptic is a person of superior intelligence. "For instance," said Dr. G., "my youngest son often staggers me with some simple question, and yet I will not acknowledge that the boy knows more than his pa." Within the pages of the old testament are many facts which will have to await the brighter light of the future, or a less unprejudiced view of the inquirer to be clearly unfolded. Most serious in their criticisms of Bible characters forget, that if within the pages of that Book the lives of those persons were not recorded, it is doubtful if they would have ever known of their history. David and Solomon, as representative characters, are named as examples of persons, whom the Bible terms, "men after God's own heart." It is true they sinned, but ours were not more free from temptation, or more pecuniar types of fallen humanity, than the present generation. However their punishments were sure and certain, and about them gibbets may be seen another, the ruthless of prejudice and the jackal of materialism, informing the world, through the medium of their own distorted vision, how the Gods of the Bible broke open sin.

John B. Gough was the climax in this literary feast. I take the opportunity in the outset to express my total inability to describe this "Prince of Natural Orators."

He stated himself that several personal and deliberate confessions to audience him, but had finally come to grief, and so I will but attempt a general description.

Mr. Gough is quite an old, and common place looking man, with sixty years of age, his face almost entirely covered with a bushy gray beard. His step is not that of a boy, he walks the rostrum like a man in his prime. He spoke on "Platform Experiences, or Twenty Years of Public Life." He mentioned quite an encouraging fact for young speakers, namely, that in all his public life, he had rambled at the first sight of an audience. While attending Divine service at Dr. Parker's church in London, the pastor requested him to come forward and make the closing prayer. "Why Mary, says Mr. G. to his wife "how can I pray before this congregation?" At last, he said, "I managed somehow to get into the pulpit and to say a few words. He further stated that on numerous occasions he had walked back and forth before the building, in which he was to speak, ere he could muster sufficient courage to appear before his hearers.

All persons, familiar with Gough's manner of speaking, know him as a story teller. In this respect he was only equalled by the immortal Lincoln. He says that when he sees or hears a good story, he appropriates it, and then keeps constantly on hand, a supply for ready illustration. "Just the other day," said he, I read a story, which struck me as a very funny one. A colored 'gemman,' named Jackson, declared to a friend that he was "certin sure dat a goat could read English," and he proceeded to prove it in the following manner. He had been out for a walk one evening, and while standing upon a high cliff, he chanced to look below, and accidently dropped his latest purchase, in the shape of a new "stove-pipe" hat. Immediately climbing down, he beheld, but the remains of the aforesaid article, which had been almost entirely destroyed by that most persevering of all animals, a goat. And, continued he, "as dere goat was standin' on his hind legs lookin straight for some letters painted on de rock, which read, Chet Jackson's hat, play.

During his first experience as a temperance lecturer, while yet a tobacco user. As he was on his way to his appointment, he was approached by an acquaintance, who offered him a dozen or more havana cigars. Said Mr. G. "my dear sir, I have no place to put the cigars as my pockets are now full." After a moments thought, the gentleman suggested that his hat would be a safe receptacle. No sooner said than done. The cigars were slipped beneath his beaver, and the speaker, who was on this occasion addressing a large gathering of children in the open air, growing enthusiastic, he asked every one present to unite in three good cheers for the "pure cold, sparkling water." Forgetting the generous gift he had recently received, he grasped his hat and out rolled a dozen good havanas. He had almost recovered himself when a wretched boy approached, and said, "here Mr. Gough is one of yer cigars." This completely overcome him, and then and there vowed eternal enmity to the use of tobacco.

The speaker related many other personal and amusing anecdotes, the audience alternately laughing at his wit, and again melted to tears at his unbelievable pathos, he related some of the scenes he had witnessed during his eventful and changed career.

He is an earnest Christian man, and loves to tell of his wonderful escape from the thraldom of intemperance, through the power of the gospel. Truly his life is an inspiration to every person, cursed by the power of habit, that yet there are numerous opportunities to obtain not only the respect and admiration of the world, but even an honored position among Earth's greatest names.

Ohio reason for keeping children until July is to get him a little accustomed to heat.

A Texas woman strangled her three children, and then hung herself, near Rich mulion, last Saturday.

The trial of the murderers of Jennie Cramer is now in progress at New Haven, Conn.—the Malley boys and Blanche Douglas.

A Missouri girl wrote 2,378 words on a postal card, and then mailed it without any address. The family didn't yet any rest that night.

CONGRESSIONAL.

In the Senate on the 20th the House impeachment bill, giving $2,000,000 for the Mississippi and $1,000,000 for the Missouri, was passed without discussion. The Anti-Chinese bill then came on. The question, as was pending when the naturalization of Cornelius, was yeas and nay by a vote of 32 to 28. The Hennessy section relating to criminal libelers, was struck out. The section relating to the Chinese was then taken up. Mr. Hill moved to strike out the section relating to the Burlingame treaty. The reading of the minutes of the previous day's session occupied the time until 2 o'clock, when the regular order, the House bill to amend section 5,440 of the Revised Statutes, was brought up. The question was upon the motion of Mr. Hill to strike out the words "and hereafter" in the first section of the bill, which motion was lost. The yeas and nays were then taken upon the passage of the bill, and resulted in its passage by the following vote: Yeas—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Beck, Bell, Blair, Booth, Call, Cameron (Pa.), Cameron (Wis.), Christiancy, Conkling, Davis (Ill.), Dawes, Eaton, Edmunds, Ferry (Mich.), Frelinghuysen, Garland, Gordon, Hamlin, Harrison, Hereford, Hill, Howe, Ingalls, Jones (Fla.), Jones (Nev.), Kellogg, Kernan, Lamar, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, McPherson, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morgan, Morrill (Me.), Morrill (Vt.), Norwood, Pendleton, Pike, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sharon, Slater, Spencer, Teller, Thurman, Vance, Voorhees, Wadleigh, Whyte, Windom and Withers—52. Nays—Messrs. Ames, Blaine, Burnside, Cameron (Pa.), Chaffee, Conover, Davis (W. Va.), Dennis, Dorsey, Fair, Farley, Hamilton (Md.), Hamilton (Tex.), Johnston, Jones (Iowa), Kirkwood, Lewis, Mandenberg, Matthews, McCreery, Miller, Paddock, Patterson, Platt, Rollins, Sargent, Saunders, Sawyer, Van Wyck, Voorhees, Wallace—28.

In the House on the 20th the Senate bill was passed to amend section 5,440 of the Revised Statutes, so as to provide that the fine imposed upon any person for violation of the laws relating to the elective franchise shall not exceed $5,000, nor the imprisonment be more than three years. A bill was passed to amend the Judiciary act of 1875, so as to provide that the Circuit Courts of the United States in the Southern district of Mississippi shall be held at Jackson, the capital of the State, on the first Monday in April and October of each year. In the trial of Bedell, one of the star-route operators, in the Police Court, at Washington on the 26th, ex-Attorney-General Mackey took the witness-stand in defense. Conversation, and that history would hold the United States Senate responsible for the disturbance which had taken place.

At the trial of Bedell, one of the star-route operators, in the Police Court, at Washington on the 26th, ex-Attorney-General Mackey took the witness-stand in defense. Conversation, and that history would hold the United States Senate responsible for the disturbance which had taken place.

A tornado visited Nanesburg, Ky., on the 27th, doing considerable damage. Near Mayslick a Gates house were blown down and a church unroofed.

Sullivan, the Boston pugilist, has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment in the House of Correction for knocking down a citizen of Boston and fracturing one of his legs.

The fish are late again in the Ipswich, Mass., streams. Last year they were plentiful on April 20, but this season not a single shad has been caught.

Representative Baker dealers from ten counties in Ohio met on the 26th ult. and organized a State Protective Association. Leading officers of Cincinnati had taken steps to enforce the Pond and Smith law.

An Anti-Chinese Convention in San Francisco on the 26th ult. drafted the memorial looking to the speedy election of the Chinese from the Pacific coast, generally or otherwise.

Miss Sowerbe, the sister of Sullivan, was in New York on the 26th ult. She stated that her brother's wife was to arrange for a lecture tour, but thought she was a rather poor elocutionist, and it was doubtful if she would make the ventures.

President Arthur was present at the graduating exercises of the artillery school at Fortress Monroe on the 26th ult., and General Barnes presented the diplomas.

The United States Senate on the 26th ult. passed the House Anti-Chinese Immigration bill, with slight amendments. The bill now goes to the House for a concurrence, which is expected to be given. From the action of the Senate it is thought the bill will become a law.

Two days on the morning of the 26th a tramp who had brutally maltreated a four year old girl, was taken by a mob from the jail at Mt. Vernon, Ills., and hung to a tree in front of the High School in that city.

Democratic and N. Y. parties have proposed a scheme to use Niagara Falls as a generator of power to run mills which to fight Chicago and New York.

Two trains on the Boston, Concord & Montreal Railroad collided on the 26th ult., and the engineer was killed and a number injured.

A San Francisco dentist named E. A. Woodard recently fatally shot a woman by the name of Mrs. Frank Baker, because she refused to marry him.

The locks of the Dalton Pail Company, at Erie, N. Y., exploded on the 26th ult., killing Joseph Wood and Frank Baker, peoples, and injuring several others.

The Senate on the 26th ult. by a vote of 28 to 20, refused to concur in the House amendments to the bill for the relief of the Michigan Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad, based on the 20th ult., above a deficiency of $112,383.

A cave full of human bones and pottery was found along the Rio Hiver, in Arizona, on the 26th ult., the latter left bodies of mutilated children had been found and buried.

The Governor of Mexico exploded her father next Kansas, S. C., on the 26th ult. She was a great party on board, of whom five were killed and four severely injured.

The wholesale tobacco establishment of Schlesinger & Co., in Louisville, valued at $100,000, was swept away by fire at an early hour on the 26th ult.

A cyclone in Texas on the 26th ult. blew off the Methodist church at Bonham, and the Warden and started the roofs with 1861 the Warden and started.

The steamer Ocean Spray was run in several collisions on the 26th ult. In the House a resolution was adopted for sending a sub-committee to New York to take testimony in the Pond-Smith investigation. In the Mississippi convention on the 26th ult. the Committee on Federal Relations reported a resolution declaring that the people of Queen Victoria was married at Windsor on March 10th, and that the people of Queen Victoria was married at Windsor on March 10th, and that the people of Queen Victoria was married at Windsor on March 10th, and Charlevoix Sentinel.

CHARLEVOIX, MAY 4, 1882.

WILLARD A. SMITH,
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

—A. D. Cruickshank, an attorney, from Livingston county, is in town with a view to permanent settlement here. He is in quest of a house and office.

—A "drunk and disorderly" was locked up Tuesday evening. He was discharged by Justice Miller Wednesday morning on payment of costs.

—The ore cars for the Detroit, Mackinac and Marquette railroad are being turned out at the rate of 35 per day and will up via Michigan Central to their destination. No less than eight hundred will be used. The shipments over this road and from St. Ignace by boat have begun. The ore docks had been completed this could have begun 10 days ago. The Sault canal is not open yet and will not be for some days from indication.

—Wm. Jenny, Secretary of State, has sent out circulars calling attention of the supervisors and assessors of Michigan to the provisions of the act to provide for the registration of births, marriages and deaths, by which it is made their duty to ascertain the births and deaths in each township, ward and city, which have occurred during the year of 1881. This duty is to be performed between the tenth of April and the first of June, by which time the full returns have to be on file with the county clerks.

—It is now definetely settled that Charlevoix is to have a foundry and machine shop. John M. Ackert and Orange S. Washburn, of this place, are to form a copartnership with that purpose in view and will at once erect a building near the track and floor factory. They will in the meantime order a lathe, and run it from the power of S. M. See Mason & Co until their building is completed when they will add an engine and such other machinery as they may require. They have engaged the services of a practical founde, and machinist.

—We have received the first number of the Northwest Farmer, published monthly by Hon. D. C. Leach, of Traverse City, and edited by the publisher, and his brother, Dr. M. L. Leach, of this place. It is a handsome eighteen page magazine, devoted exclusively to to the discussion of agricultural and horticultural topics. The editor truly says that there is abundant room in this region for the Farmer to live and flourish, and we are sure the regular press of the region will wish it God speed. It is but one dollar per year, and every farmer should subscribe for it.

—President Gates and S. M. Moore, of the Chicago Summer Resort, were here last week and inaugurated improvements on their grounds which will materially change the looks of thing up there. A Traverse City plumber has been engaged to put in a system of pipes throughout the Club House, for water supply. An elevated reservoir and wind mill will be the means employed to furnish water. Work will be commenced immediately on the proposed bowling alley, and an addition to the Club House. Tea or more cottages will be erected.

—A little unpleasantness occured at Ironton Monday afternoon. It was "open ing day" for the two saloons recently established there, and beer was free. As a result, some of the boys imbibed too freely and were discharged by the Superintendent. They refused to leave, however, and took possession of the tasting house, refusing admittance to allow those who were sent to take their places. The Superintendent and Deputy Sheriff Munnay were unable to arrange matters, and Sheriff Cooper was sent for. On his arrival there every thing was quiet, and has so continued up to this writing.

—Although it was generally understood last week that Capt. Philip Caffrey came to his death by drowning at Millecoquins river, somewhat of mystery seems to surround his disappearance. The vessel arrived here Friday, and Joseph Papineau, who shipped with Caffrey, has no positive knowledge as to the manner of his death. At twelve o'clock on the night of the 15th Papineau saw Caffrey sinking dice at a saloon. No one saw him leave for the vessel, but as the yawl was gone in the morning, the most reasonable thoors is that he shoved off for the vessel, missed her, and was driven out into the lake by the severe wind and snow storm which prevailed. Bernard Caffrey, of Grand Rapids, brother of the deceased, accompanied by the sheriff, went to Millecoquins last week to investigate the matter, but learned nothing more than the above facts.

Later—A dispatch yesterday from Cheboygan states that the yawl of the Fair Play has been found on Garden Island beach, right side up, with the oars in. This seems to abolish the theory that Caffrey was carried out by the boat, but with or seems to point to the fact that the boat was not aleft by some person. A suspicion of foul play seems to lurk in the minds of some.

New stock of dry goods at R. H. Clark's.

—The steamer J. J. Mosley arrived here from Detroit Sunday and proceeded to Boyne City. She is a fine steamer, with two cabins finished in elaborate style but seems to lack freight room. She is 7- tons long, and is speedy. Capt. Geo. Champion is her master, and W. F. Long her engineer. Her running is not yet established. She will give an excursion to Petoskey Sunday.

—Antrim county is to have a series of monthly fairs to be held at Torch Lake, having the reason for the purpose of giving farmers opportunities to buy, sell or exchange horses, mules oxen, cows, sheep, swine, or anything in the shape of farm stock.

—In spunking of his new book, Gutteau says: "A new line of thought runs through it, and if it does not demonstrate the existence of heaven and hell, I submit that its existence cannot be proved." In this connection it might not be out of place to remark that while a great many good people do not believe in everlasting fire and lakes of burning brimstone, it is difficult to contemplate Gutteau and his crime without feeling that there must be some punishment after death, as life is too short to get even with him.

—Manistee county opens the Congressional fight with the name of Gen. H. M. Cutcheon to the masthead, while Wexford county comes the front with the name of Don McCoy, of Cadillac. McCoy is a rich lumberman who will spend money freely to secure his nomination. Gen. Cutcheon has no money to spend, but is an orator of renown a soldier with a record, a lawyer of ability and a gentleman from head to foot. Besides this he lives on the lake shore and knows all about the harbor interests, which is to be a Charlevoix voucher a tender spot. We are told that our friend Cha ley Crandell, of Big Rapids, is also on the war path. The SENTINEL, however, expresses no choice at present.

If you have a cold at cough at any kind buy a bottle of Hills Dandelion Cough Syrup. Use it all, if not satisfied return the empty bottle and I will refund your money. I also sell the Peerless Worm Specific on the same terms. No cure no pay.

At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the Probate office in the village of Charlevoix, on the fourth day of April in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two.

Present, James A. Rose, Judge of Probate.

In the matter of the estate of Joseph Lockwood, deceased. On reading and filing the petition duly verified, of Joseph Lockwood, praying among other things that a deed be made to Joseph Lockwood and Don McCoy, of Cadillac, McCoy is a rich lumberman who will spend money freely to secure his nomination. Gen. Cutcheon has no money to spend, but is an orator of renown a soldier with a record, a lawyer of ability and a gentleman from head to foot. Besides this he lives on the lake shore and knows all about the harbor interests, which is to be a Charlevoix voucher a tender spot. —The bridge tender is to have a new "office," to cost $100.

—Miss Jennie Carpenter of this place, is visiting friend in Elk Rapids.

—Crosse & Dirmon are looking for a site upon which to build a brickery.

—Byron See returned from Chicago Tuesday with a new stock of goods.

—It is enough to make a horse laugh to hear the Petoskey editors talk about their "lumber."

—C. T. Chapin, of the Cadillac News, and Hon. T. J. Thorpe, of Cadillac called on us Tuesday.

—Editor W. Miller, although very sick with typhoid fever, is slowly but steadily gaining ground.

—Temperance meeting at the M. E. Church Sunday evening, which will be addressed by several citizens.

—Dr. O. H. Reed and family arrived from Cheboygan yesterday, and are now permanent residents of Charlevoix.

—Capt. J. J. Bennett, late of the schooner Wave Shearing, is to do the fine carpenter work on Hayes & Co's new tug.

—The steamer Lucerne came over the harbor last trip freezing on ropes and a hill, and didn't touch the bottom either.

—Mrs. Hosley, of this place, has purchased the lot on Traverse City, and is a contractor for the erection of a house.

—Geo. T. J. Thorpe, of Cadillac, is about to erect a saw mill on the old lath factory place on South Arm, for the manufacture of lath and table stuff.

—Some good evidence at the growth of herbrium is the fact that S. M. See, Mason & Co. have thirty-two carpenters on their pay roll, and want more.

—The Cornelian timber reknower Allen case was in part yesterday. She removed to the custom house and proceeded to Little Traverse Bay after a cargo for Lyon & Son.

—The snow Lottie Mason, of this port, went ashore on two River Point during the recent fog. She was hauled with ease. At last accounts she was not released.

—President Cherrie, of the Iron Co., has authority for stating that the G. R. & I. R. R. Co. will survey a route from Manistique to Charlevoix via Ironton, this summer.

—The Charlevoix Sentinel has just closed its thirteenth volume. It justly credits itself with having done much for its party and the development of Charlevoix county.—Traverse City Eagle.

—Col. Harsond, and an Engineer officer who is about to succeed him in charge of the harbors of this shore, are expected in town as we go to press, to consult with our Common Council concerning harbor improvement matters.

—The SENTINEL warm error last week in stating that Joseph Papineau saw Capt. Caffrey in a saloon at 12 on the night of the 12th. He was told by another person that he was mista. It was an error on the part of our reporter.

—The "Charlevoix fleet" is growing to quite a respectable proportion, steamers and vessels are now owned here as follows: Hayes, Parker, Haggie, Bob Stephenson, Minnie Warner, Lucerne, Lucerne, Charlotte, Clara Belle, Nora Beach, M. W. Wright, Seven Lottie Mason, Hercules, a half interest in the Supply; Schooners Sea Gem, Flowring, DeCoudres and Watts Sherman.

—Anyone who doubts that Charlevoix is the commercial center of the Pine Lake region, should observe the number of passengers discharged by the three Pine Lake and South Arm steamers every day between 10 and 11 o'clock a. m. If this fails to convince them, they should call at each of our seven leading stores, and note the actions of every person connected therewith. It is a damned to be ever thus, only in an increased degree.

—Charlevoix now has one of the most complete and convenient livery stables in Northern Michigan. It is seventy feet long, forty feet wide, and has about thirty stalls, arranged in such a manner that everything about the barn is easy, orderly and very convenient. An office and waiting room is being fitted up in one corner of the main room, which will be carpeted and furnished in a neat and comfortable style, that ladies may rest in waiting, be annoyed by noise or offensive odors. It is a credit to the village.

—The Boyne City Standard of last week contains many items of interest, especially concerning the matter, and is selling. The scheme will scare no body down this way, and only serves to illustrate the utter hopelessness of ever securing the county seat at Boyne City. Inasmuch as we have heard the plan spoken of by others we are inclined to think such a course of action is not unlikely.

—President Cherrie has been spending a few days at Ironton. Mr. Lovelace, the new Superintendent also arrived at the same time Thursday. Mr. Patterson, who lately resigned the Superintendency, has accepted the position of chief accountant, but has been allowed a vacation of a few weeks, and leaves for the East Monday. Mr. Stewart is transferred into the auditing branch of the company's service. The company are making many improvements about their docks. An iron railway, with freighting sub-tracks is being built from the wharf house to the wharf, and the wharf cars will be hauled up the incline by a stationary engine and cable. Hoists are on the ground for a new steam travelling, the design being to make all their handlings by power.

MURDER!

A Coroners Jury Decides that Phillip Caffrey was Murdered.

A message from Capt. Bouchard of the propeller Van Raalte on Friday last, announced that Phillip Caffrey's body had been found at Naubinway Bay, and on Saturday the body arrived by propeller Grand Rapids.

Capt. Bouchard wrote to the widow, expressing the opinion that Caffrey came to his death by foul means and advising his relatives to institute a post mortem examination. On opening the body evidences were plainly visible that the opinion was well grounded. A wound was found between the eye and the bridge of the nose, into which a probe was inserted unobstructed to a depth of four inches and several knife wounds bruises were apparent about the head.

Justice Washburn summoned a jury on Saturday evening and Dr. Presson dissected the head of the corpse expecting to find a bullet, but found none. The further particulars of the investigation are set forth concisely in the following verdict of he jury.

The House Anti-Chinese Bill.

The following is the full text of the Anti-Chinese immigration bill as passed by the National House of Representatives on the 19th:

AS SAID treaties contain stipulations relating to the Chinese:

WHEREAS, In the opinion of the Government of the United States, the coming of Chinese laborers to the country endangers the good order of certain localities within the territory thereof; therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the expiration of sixty days next after the passage of this act, and until the expiration of ten years next after the passage of this act, the coming of Chinese laborers to this country be, and the same is hereby, suspended, and during such suspension it shall not be lawful for any Chinese laborer to come, or having come, after the expiration of said sixty days, to remain within the United States.

SEC. 2. That any master of any vessel or other owner of any vessel who shall knowingly bring within any port of the United States such Chinese laborer not entitled to come within the United States by the provisions of the first section of this act, or the master, owner, agent or consignee of any such vessel who shall cause any such Chinese laborer to be landed from any such vessel at any port within the United States, except in case of distress, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars for each and every such Chinese laborer so brought, and may also be imprisoned for a term not exceeding one year.

SEC. 3. That the master of any vessel before the departure of such vessel for a port within the United States from any foreign port or place shall deposit with the collector of customs of the district in which such vessel shall arrive, a list or manifest of all Chinese laborers taken on board such vessel at any foreign port or place, and touching at any port or place in the United States, and destined to some port or place within the United States, whether such Chinese laborers shall remain on board such vessel or not, or whether they shall be landed from such vessel at the port of arrival or at some other port or place within the United States, and such list or manifest shall show the number of such Chinese laborers who remain on board such vessel and who are destined to some port or place within the United States, and such list or manifest shall be certified by the master of such vessel under his oath to be true; and before any such vessel shall be granted a clearance by the collector of customs of the district from which she is about to depart for a port within the United States, the master of such vessel shall produce to such collector a certificate, signed by the consular officer of the United States, if there be one at the port or place from which such vessel is about to depart, that the master has deposited with him a list or manifest of all Chinese laborers taken on board his vessel at such port or place, and that he has given the bond required by the preceding section of this act; and such consular officer shall furnish to the master of any such vessel, applying therefor, a copy of the list or manifest deposited with him by such master, certified by such consular officer; and if any master of any such vessel shall refuse or neglect to deposit such list or manifest with the collector of customs, as aforesaid, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than one thousand dollars, and by imprisonment for not more than one year.

SEC. 4. That no person, company, partnership or corporation shall hereafter cause or permit the coming of Chinese laborers to this country from any foreign port or place, or from any port or place within the United States to any other port or place within the United States, by means of the owning, hiring or chartering in whole or in part of any vessel, boat or other water craft, and any vessel, boat or other water craft, knowingly employed in violation of this section of this act, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and proceeded against in the same manner as is provided for the seizure and forfeiture of vessels for violation of the revenue laws of the United States.

SEC. 5. That no Chinese laborer shall be permitted to enter the United States by land at any port not designated by the collector of customs of the district in which such port is situated, and such collector shall designate one or more ports of entry in his district for the entry of Chinese laborers, and such as may be necessary in each of the districts on the Pacific coast; and no Chinese laborer who shall enter the United States in violation of this act shall be permitted to remain within the United States, but shall be arrested and returned to the country from whence he came, at the cost of the United States, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

SEC. 6. That this act shall not apply to diplomatic and other officers of the Chinese Government residing upon the business of that Government, whose credentials, in the usual form, shall be taken as equivalent to the passport herein provided for; nor to the officers of the United States, nor to the family and household servants of the foregoing officers, or to any Chinese laborer.

SEC. 7. That hereafter no State court or court of the United States shall admit Chinese to citizenship, and all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 8. That the words "Chinese laborers," wherever used in this act, shall be construed to mean both skilled and unskilled laborers and Chinese employed in mining.

Suggestions Regarding Tornadoes.

General Hazen, Chief Signal Officer, is paying much attention to the subject of tornadoes, with a view of finding out, if possible, the cause of this class of storms that some of their evils may be mitigated. All who have studied that are liable to be often alerted by these developments in the atmosphere know that already Sergeant Finley is about to start out to investigate the track of the storm which swept over Michigan, Iowa and Illinois on the 15th inst. Sergeant Finley has done some very valuable work on this sort of peril. Last year the Signal Service issued as one of its professional papers a very interesting monograph on the character of the storms of May 29 and June 30, 1880. The map issued in connection therewith, at the offices of the Western Union Telegraph Company during the recent days of storm, was used with the greatest danger to the operators in charge of the instruments. A wire was worked between Chicago and St. Paul without any battery, the wire being grounded at both ends.

The oldest telegraph operator failed to recall any other instance of the same wonderful power of the electricity in the air. Although there was no battery, the click of the instrument was shown by the brilliancy of the discharge of the electricity, which could be plainly heard from the street. The working of the instrument was also affected by the state of the atmosphere, and there is no doubt in the minds of those who have had experience in telegraphy that the storm was upon them. The people in the vicinity of the wires were startled by the brilliancy of the discharge, which could be seen in the highways and byways for miles distant. Fences were burned by the electricity, and in the valley the river bluffs behind the Oakley House.

The storm was of unusual magnificence. It was accompanied by a terrific display of electricity, and the roar of the wind was like thunder. Standing the fact that the period during which the storm was passing was only a few minutes, it left a wide track of ruin behind it. The storm was first noticed as affecting the telegraph wires in the vicinity of Rockford, Ill., at 5:30 o'clock this morning. It swept on with great velocity in the direction of north and south, the track of the storm being from the north-west to the south-east. The storm was at its greatest force when it struck Janesville, Wis., at 6:30 o'clock. The storm was accompanied by a heavy rain, which fell in torrents. The path of the storm was about a quarter of a mile wide, and in that path every house, tree, or stump in that path was torn to pieces.

After leaving Janesville the tornado passed on to Beloit, Wis., and then to Rockford, Ill., where it struck the city at 7 o'clock. The storm was of short duration, but it did an immense amount of damage. Many buildings were destroyed, and the path of the storm was strewn with the ruins of houses, barns, fences, trees, and stumps. The storm was accompanied by a heavy rain, which fell in torrents. The storm was of short duration, but it did an immense amount of damage. Many buildings were destroyed, and the path of the storm was strewn with the ruins of houses, barns, fences, trees, and stumps. The storm was accompanied by a heavy rain, which fell in torrents. The path of the storm was about a quarter of a mile wide, and in that path every house, tree, or stump in that path was torn to pieces.

A Remarkable Display of Northern Lights.

The heavens were brilliantly illuminated last night by the most remarkable display of auroral lights. The phenomenon was first seen about an hour and a half after sundown, and then the heavy masses of clouds piled against the northern horizon were suddenly swept away, and long streaks of light appeared, which soon ordered light of more dazzling brilliancy. The display lasted until an hour before morning, the lights meanwhile having shifted from their first position to the zenith, and to the eastern heavens. The phenomenon was admired by all who witnessed its magnificence, and those, in the general opinion, exceeded in duration and brilliancy the well-remembered aurora borealis of 1870.

While thousands were lost in their admiration of the beautiful spectacle, many persons could not view the occasion of considerable fear. The electric current which accompanied such an unusual display of the aurora borealis was the most severe ever known in the history of telegraphy. It practically rendered useless all telegraph wires that were subject to disturbance from the character of the storms of May 29 and June 30, 1880. The only means of communication with the outside world was by the telephone, which was somewhat interfered with by the electric current. From this o'clock very little of the telegraphic business was transacted, either in messages, could be sent over the lines, and people in need, and even messages of importance, went was done with the greatest danger to the operators in charge of the instruments. A wire was worked between Chicago and St. Paul without any battery, the wire being grounded at both ends.

The oldest telegraph operator failed to recall any other instance of the same wonderful power of the electricity in the air. Although there was no battery, the click of the instrument was shown by the brilliancy of the discharge of the electricity, which could be plainly heard from the street. The working of the instrument was also affected by the state of the atmosphere, and there is no doubt in the minds of those who have had experience in telegraphy that the storm was upon them. The people in the vicinity of the wires were startled by the brilliancy of the discharge, which could be seen in the highways and byways for miles distant. Fences were burned by the electricity, and in the valley the river bluffs behind the Oakley House.

The storm was of unusual magnificence. It was accompanied by a terrific display of electricity, and the roar of the wind was like thunder. Standing the fact that the period during which the storm was passing was only a few minutes, it left a wide track of ruin behind it. The storm was first noticed as affecting the telegraph wires in the vicinity of Rockford, Ill., at 5:30 o'clock this morning. It swept on with great velocity in the direction of north and south, the track of the storm being from the north-west to the south-east. The storm was at its greatest force when it struck Janesville, Wis., at 6:30 o'clock. The storm was accompanied by a heavy rain, which fell in torrents. The path of the storm was about a quarter of a mile wide, and in that path every house, tree, or stump in that path was torn to pieces.

After leaving Janesville the tornado passed on to Beloit, Wis., and then to Rockford, Ill., where it struck the city at 7 o'clock. The storm was of short duration, but it did an immense amount of damage. Many buildings were destroyed, and the path of the storm was strewn with the ruins of houses, barns, fences, trees, and stumps. The storm was accompanied by a heavy rain, which fell in torrents. The path of the storm was about a quarter of a mile wide, and in that path every house, tree, or stump in that path was torn to pieces.

Destructive Cyclone at Brownsville, Mo.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., April 18.

A terrific cyclone swept over the town of Brownsville, Saline County, Mo., at 4 o'clock this afternoon. The entire business portion of the town was demolished and seven persons killed and between twenty and thirty others badly injured. The storm came from the southwest, and was very similar in the one which destroyed the town of Richmond four years ago. The storm came up so suddenly that the people had not a chance to escape. It was preceded by a terrific crashing sound, and could see myriads of pieces of timber and debris shooting against the sky. The storm did not last more than a minute, but in that time the town was laid in ruins and terror-stricken people were running in all directions.

The first place the storm struck was the Missouri Pacific depot, which was completely demolished. It was apparently about two miles wide, and from this point it moved in a northeasterly direction, carrying destruction in its path. Charlevoix Sentinel.

CHARLEVOIX, MAY 11, 1882.

WILLARD A. SMITH
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR

Utah Letter

Salt Lake City, Utah, April 28, 1882.

Special Correspondence of the Sentinel.

Thirty-five years have elapsed since a white-winged messenger guided the pioneers on the shoulder and said—"Build here a house for the distressed and persecuted people."

Mr. Young said that he would think about it, and at once set about to reconnoitre the locality.

He found the location to be situated at the west base of a spur of the Wahsatch Mountains, ten miles east of the river Jordan, and twelve miles S. E. of Great Salt Lake, and having an elevation of 4329 feet above the level of the sea—a little higher than he liked, now, unless he soon fell in with the Messenger's suggestion. Two days later, with square and scratchawl, Mr. Young consummated a laying out the city, and to-day one remarkable feature is its regularity.

The streets are each 128 feet wide, and on either side is a ditch, through which flows a stream of living water, brought from City Creek and carried to all parts of the city.

Along the edges of the sidewalks (which for the convenience of the married men are twenty feet in width) and along the ditches stand numerous shade trees, which make the streets cool and lovely.

The city covers an area of 200 blocks, each containing ten acres. Each block is divided into eight lots, every one of which is 10x20 rods, and contains a small farm of 1½ acres.

The dwelling are built principally of sun-dried brick and are generally low, small, ordinary buildings of one story. They much resemble many of the houses found upon southern plantations, but with this exception, the sides and not the ends front the street.

Those constructed by polygamists have a separate entrance for each wife. "There is policy in war."

In case the proprietor takes to his arms another celestial, an additional structure is at once attached to one end or the other of his humble dwelling, and in case he again feels disposed &c., &c.

Nearly every lot has an orchard of apple, pear, peach, plum, and apricot trees, together with grapes and all kinds of small fruit; a garden of onions, beets, turnips, cabbage, tomatoes and potatoes, and a small field of corn. At a distance the city looks like one vast orchard, nearer, it looks like a thickly settled farming community.

The residence of the late Brigham Young is a two story structure, adorned with a cupola, and surrounded on two sides by a two story verandah. It is barren of all artistic beauty, but any number of natural beauties can be seen on the fence, round the corners in the doors, through the windows, and even peeping over the roof of the house. Altogether, the building has much the appearance of the common hotel.

This, with its many structures attached, and its many dwellings standing apart occupies an entire block, called Brigham Young's block. The latter is surrounded not by a lone picket fence, but by a huge stone wall, some fifteen feet in height, studded every few rods by enormous stone pillars and cut through by arched driveways and foot paths, capable of being closed and bolted.

The general appearance of the Reverend's institution is that of a young state's prison.

About one-half of the business places are one story buildings, long, low, and poorly lighted. They bear unmistakably the mormon stamp. The other half are much better, having two stories, better light and a yankee appearance. In fact it is the gentile yankee that gives Salt Lake City its business and enterprise.

The city is divided into twenty blocks, each under the control of a bishop, while the government of the city at large is vested in a mayor and common council. But the mayor and common council are really under the control of the president of the mormon church; therefore the president has the control of the people, 70,000 of which—one-third of the entire population—are gentiles or apostate mormons.

The schools that are presided by law and supported by tax, and the teachers employed therein, are mormons, and more, the law provides that the pupils shall be assiduously and regularly taught the sectarian catechism affirming the revelation of Joseph Smith. There are also many good private schools. The principal ones are the University of Deseret, (Mormon) the Roman Catholic nunnery, St. Mark's schools, (Episcopal) and the Presbyterian and Methodist schools.

For its library the city is indebted to the ladies.

One would think, not from the intelligent appearance of the people, O, no, that every other block contained a printing establishment. Yesterday, while your correspondent was leaning against a lamp post, a regular gas lamp post—for you must know that the city has lately put in several miles of gas pipe—a little fat man down the street singing out, "Salt Lake Tribune," "Salt Lake Herald," "Utah Farmer," "Utah Commercial," escaping me rushed up and said "Mister, have a favorable Instructor?" Well now I felt my dignity and manhood, but when I called "No" to Utah's cry, and pushing my chance, he went down the street crying, "Rocky Mountain Christian Advocate," "Semi Weekly Deseret News," "Gram ho-n & Nye Hemlandet Weekly."

This was more than I could endure so took a second view, know that there is less than five miles of it street railway, buried by the Mormon tabernacle, a huge domely structure, covered by a roof, self-supporting concave, and capable of seating 16,000 persons.

As we the street car and re-embarked upon the temple, and I saw everywhere groups of Mormon females taking charge of some poor hopeless wretch and binding him to—I don't know whom. I called the attention of our conductor to the washing out tracks to kill the mormons, but these ashen-colour women will do this work quicker and cheaper.

At that moment the car is stopped before the temple. I looked upon a structure that will cost the mormons $10,000,000.

Q.

An oriental writer has recently given an interesting description of an ancient burial in the Chinese empire. It was the custom for the wealthy man to procure his coffin when he had reached the age of forty. He would then have it painted three times a year with a composition resembling delicate paint or enamel, which formed an exceeding hard coating. The process of making this paint is now one of the lost arts of China. If the owner of the coffin lived long enough, the frequent painting—each coat being of considerable thickness—caused it to assume the appearance of a sarcophagus, with a foot or more in thickness of this hard, stone-like shell. After death the veins and cavities of the person's stomach were filled with quicksilver for the purpose of preserving the body. A piece of jade would then be placed in each nostril and ear, and in one hand, while a piece of bar silver would be placed in the other hand. The body thus prepared was placed on a layer of quicksilver within the coffin, the latter was sealed, and the whole deposited in its final resting-place. When some of these sarcophagus were opened after a lapse of centuries, the bodies were found to be perfectly preserved, but they quickly crumbled to dust on being exposed to the air.

The following reasons are given by Ben Butler for refusing to take part in the defense of Guiteau: Some time ago he made a vow never to engage in the defense of a criminal. This grew out of the fact that he was once assigned by court to the defense of a man who had killed one of his, Butler's best friends; and as a result of the the line of defence pursued, the man escaped severe punishment. Butler says: "Then came the hue and cry of my political enemies. This is the man, they said, who escorts the widow to the grave at the funeral of his faithful Lincoln, weeps crocodile tears, and then defends the assassin and assists him in defeating the ends of justice." At the next election I did not get even one vote in that district, though, therefore, they had been unanimously cast in my interest. Can you then wonder at my registering a vow never to enter a criminal court again?"

Secretary Teller recommends that the Indians be disarmed and disarmed, and set to learning agricultural pursuits, as a means of self support, as soon as possible. He asks: "Of what use are firearms to them? There is no game for them to hunt. We feed them and we must continue to do so until they can support themselves. Why should we allow them to ride about with their repeating and breech-loading carbines? They only furnish means and temptation to murder. We disarmed and dismounted two thousand Sioux, some time ago, and they have been ten fold more progressive since than more than in the same length of time before.

M. Arthur Morin, of Paris, states that experiments continued for a number of years by garrisoned cavalry regiments in various parts of France have proved that horses are healthier and stronger when kept in stables with doors and windows open night and day in all seasons than when they are kept shut. Similar observations have been made in stables containing large numbers of cattle, which are by good ventilation relieved of horn epidemic affections of the respiratory organs.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Live Stock and Wool.

Fifty-three public meetings were held in the 83 school districts of Bangor during the past year. Interesting facts are taken: Cattle and sheep throughout the State are generally in good condition. The mortality among breeding ewes and lambs is, with few exceptions, reported unusually small. The mortality among swine is no greater than usual. Reports have been received of the quantity of wheat sold during the months of January, February and March at 21 elevators and mills. Of this 37,287 are by the authors from 1,000 of counties, which is nearly one-half of the whole number of elevators and mills in those counties. The total number of markets marketed is 68,138, of which 196,-868 bushels were marketed in the first or southern tier of counties, 133,040 bushels in the second tier, 46,525 bushels in the third tier, 77,523 bushels in the fourth tier, and 20,-907 bushels in the counties north of the southern tier of townships. The average price per bushel, or three per cent. of the whole number by 5 cts. which reports have been received, there was no material change during the month. Already engagements and sales the product of the year 1877 have been made, which is nearly twenty-two per cent. of the quantity marketed at the same places during the months of January and February.

A few months ago Mrs. Dr. B. I. Ichenor died at the Detroit House of Correction of heart disease, she was carrying excellent health previous to sending to jail, and was confined in her household duties when she suddenly fell ill, and informed her youngest daughter that she was going to die, which she did immediately after. Only two and a half years ago her husband, Dr. I. Ichenor, of Macon, died also suddenly of cramps in the stomach. Mrs. Ichenor visited the graves of her husband and daughter on the day she died, and seemed she was that she might be alongside them and be at rest. She was fifty-three years old and leaves five sons and three daughters, all grown.

Reports to the State Board of Health by fifty-one observers in different localities, for the week ended April 6, show that diphtheria and diarrhœa increased and scarlatina, typhoid malaria, inflammatory remained the same, and intermittent decreased in area of prevalence. Diphtheria was reported at eighteen places, scarlet fever at eight, measles at five, and typhoid fever at three places, viz.: Battle Creek, Flint and Milford.

At Farmington, Monroe County, the safes in the stores of Buckley & Russell, J. Barnett and J. Becker were blown open on the other night and robbed of $1,200. A lot of jewelry, pocket-cutlery, etc., was taken from Buckley & Russell. The thieves also stole a horse and buggy from the livery stable and made good their escape.

A man named Joseph Cole, who has been living three miles north of Cadillac, in the town of Haring, during the past winter, disappeared very early a few mornings ago, taking with him a span of horses, a sleigh, harness and whatever he had borrowed from Thomas Graham, and some hay and feed which he found at Morley's. After leaving Cadillac with the stolen property he sold the horses at Traverse City, and on the 19th of February was arrested at Petoskey, and brought back to this city. He pleaded guilty to the charge of stealing the horses, and was sentenced to the State Prison for two years.

Saturday night the residence of Mr. Jacob Lamb, of Ypsilanti, was entered by burglars, who secured $1,000 in money and a gold watch. Mr. Lamb had been to Detroit on business, and had returned home on the train which arrived at Ypsilanti at 10:30 o'clock. He had retired to bed, and was awakened by the burglars, who were in the room. He sprang out of bed and grappled with one of them, but was overpowered by the other, who struck him a heavy blow on the head with a club. The burglars then secured the money and watch, and escaped.

Mrs. John Meacher, a lady about fifty years of age, fell from a wild-eagle farmer living four miles from Ithaca, Gladiator County, committed suicide by drowning in the Maple River a few mornings ago. She had been very despondent for the past thirteen days. She had previously attempted to take her life, but was not found.

No Politics in the Case.

During the preparation of the South Carolina election cases for presentation to the courts, Attorney-General Brewster addressed two letters to Sanders, special attorney for the United States. These letters were written since the South came in for other letters of the Attorney-General on the progress of the South Carolina cases, and were not included among those sent to the Senate. In the first letter, under date of April 1, Attorney-General Brewster writes Mr. Sanders, saying:

What I desire to say expressly is, not that the cases are Mr. Mellen's. He has been able and polished prosecutions. Neither does it make any difference as to the duty of prosecution that the alleged to be the result of political excitement. The duty is the same. It is a question of Democrat or Republican. It was questioned on the trial of the Ku-Klux that which is the every duty of all our instruments. I did not write you for the purpose of bringing political effect of the prosecutions. I wrote you because I was informed that you were going to Washington on business, and that I may desire to consult you in person. I have assumed to do this in all those who represent this Department and who have been entrusted with the prosecution of such cases. Neither would I have you suppose that I have any desire to control your personal views of the constitutionality of the statutes. Duties of this kind are the responsibility of the Attorney-General, because he cannot have time to urge or assume responsibility in circumstances not one for special necessities, which assistance was granted just as soon as proper application has been presented to him.

Any such personal assistance is required, and it will be given. Any aid in addition that is wanted, for time will through you or by myself, or by letter, during your absence, and he shall have it. But I hope you will not feel that you need any personal assistance—every assistance possible will be given you, and the fullest and most extensive confidence in any way. As far as the legal point is concerned, all that is asked for and desired shall be given and has been given, and if there is not an open, public trial, and the responsibility of the decision is not with the jury, the reason for that cannot be laid to the charge of the Department. It is not the duty of the Department to shirk responsibility or strengthening Mr. Mellen. Have you let me know in writing or by letter, stating just what it is he desires and requires and he will have it at once. Where your presence is deserted you I did not perhaps half an inquiry to the Department, and I have not been informed in any way. Please let me hear from you, and be assured that I am not indifferent to the interests of the people. Thirteen cases have been tried and decided, or there would not be an attempt now to put them in the newspapers. Let me not be regarded in a rather loose way as indifferent to the interests of the people. Please let me hear from you, and be assured that I am not indifferent to the interests of the people. Thirteen cases have been tried and decided, or there would not be an attempt now to put them in the newspapers. Let me not be regarded in a rather loose way as indifferent to the interests of the people. Please let me hear from you, and be assured that I am not indifferent to the interests of the people.

In the second letter, under date of April 4, Attorney-General Brewster writes Mr. Sanders, saying:

I am in receipt of your letter of the 3d inst., and I have had delay at a place of the Department. I have written you several times in relation to the matter of the Department. It is rather late in the day to be writing you about the Charleston cases, and I fear that delay at this point may be fatal to the prosecutions. The present indictments are based upon the Enforcement Act,

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

—On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings, May 15, 16 and 17, Maxwell's Theatre will appear at Lewis' Hall in Charlevoix, giving "R ossini" on Monday evening, "Streets of New York" on Tuesday, and "Octoroon" on Wednesday. These plays are all of a high order, having been played with great success in all the principal theatres of the country. This company, although they have never appeared here, are well and favorably known in this State and region, having appeared in Traverse City the past five nights, and playing nine successive nights there next last engagement there. Such a company deserve success, and we doubt not will play to good houses here.

—Col. F. Harwood, and Capt. Heep, of the Engineer corps, were here today and met the common council, for the purpose of conversing with them in regard to the future plan of improvement of Charlevoix harbor. The engineer and our council are in perfect harmony a the matter and Capt. Heep who is hereafter to have charge of this harbor, will visit the locality coming appropriation, extend the north revetment in a distance overlapping the old State pier work, and dredge a fourteen foot channel. He expects to do the work in August and September if the bill passes, as it is expected to. The engineer has also decided to include in his plan the dredging of a channel in the north draw of the bridge.

Hayes from Hayes—By Gins.

Mr. Booth is building a new house near Kawgo-che-wing.

Mr. Henry Flickenger of Elkhart, Ind. has arrived and taken possession of his farm.

Sabbath school was organized at Carpenter, a week ago last Sabbath.

Samuel Cozzens has sold his farm of forty acres to Luman Scott. Consideration $350. Mr. Cozzins will remove to the southern part of the state.

Lou Burgess of Petoskey exhibited his countenance in Hayes last Sunday.

W. B. Sayres sold forty acres in Sec. 14 to a brother-in-law of Lo Scott's. Consideration $400.

S. W. Soulter has been installed post master at Burgess Post Office.

Capt. J. Bennet has purchased the Chamberlain tract of land known as the Bigbone farm and will build a frame house thereon.

Capt Bennet will bring his family from Cleveland, Ohio, as quick as he can get into his new house.

Tom Lake moved to Burgess last Monday. He is engaged in lumbering for E. H. Burgess.

Two young men who bought forty acres of J. Wolff were out on their land a few days ago; set a log heap on fire, burned up one of their coats, singed the other fellows hair, and concluded they had committed deviltry enough for one day and adjourned sine die.

Last Saturday morning Moses Cooper, on going to the stable found his bay mare gone. The bridle and halter were also missing and he concluded she was stolen. He tracked her in the direction of Boyne City and started in pursuit. The mare came home about noon minus bridle and halter and showed signs of being badly used. It is a pity the perpetrator of such a deed could not be brought to justice.

E. H. Burgess lost all of his tools together with his turning lathe in the burning of his saw mill, as stated in the SENTINEL last week, which makes his sop still heavier. We understand he will rebuild the mill.

Why cannot the farmers of Charlevoix Co. organize and Agricultural Society? We see that our sister counties are organizing societies and we say let Charlevoix organize at once.

We clip the following from the Bridgewater Courier items in the Montpelier, O. Enterprise. We learn that Mr. T. A. Dean is at Charlevoix, Mich. and has engaged for the season to paint those boats, etc.

NEWS SUMMARY.

Important Intelligence from All Parts

CONGRESSIONAL.

In the Senate on the 28th the bill to give twelve condemned soldiers to the Soldiers' Home passed. The Association of Indiana was passed. The motion to refer to the Judiciary Committee the bill removing the disqualification of ex-Confederates for army appointments was defeated—21 to 22—a party vote. Mr. Davis (Ill.) voting with the Republicans. Mr. Lapham introduced a bill to grant to Michigan the Saginaw Agricultural College scrip. Several Amendments pending on the House of suffrage on account of race, in the Territories, were defeated. The bill to amend the Tariff-Commission bill, Mr. Blair in charge, in favor of the measure. The Senate declined to confirm the Diplomatic correspondents in regard to the extradition of Jose H. Barela was presented and referred.

A SENATE look place in the Senate on the 30 on the Political Disabilities bill. Morrill, Logan and Hawley strongly against, and Messrs. Butler, Hampton and Voorhees in favor of the measure. On the bill to amend the Courts of Appeals, the amendment as to pattern and copyright cases was rejected—yeas 20, nays 27—Democrats. The House amendment to the bill for the sale of Mille Lacs Indian reservation was concurred in. Bills were reported to the House from the Committee on Ways and Means to extend the time for the erection of a memorial building at Washington to the memory of Joseph N. Nicollet; to repeal the internal revenue taxes on manufactured tobacco, reporting the substitute of the Committee on Military Affairs reported a substitute for the bill to restore to the army the officers dismissed, reducing that service thirty-five hundred men. The bill to restore to the list of Supervisors of the Census the name of Francis A. Walker, President, so after reaching the age of eighty-five. The Speaker signed the Senate bill.

In the Senate on the 4th Mr. Voorhees called up Smith's resolution for an investigation of alleged corrupt influences and bribery, and spoke against the bonded period for whisky. Mr. Wood on the same subject. Mr. Hamlin spoke in favor of the measure. A committee of five to inquire about the money had been expended by the Treasury Department. Mr. Sherman introduced bills for the preservation of forests on public lands; for the disposition of ex-Confederates; for the organization of ex-Confederates; for compensation to soldiers in Indian wars. In the House the resolutions of the Tariff Commission were called up by Mr. Cox of the Whole, occupied the entire day.

Mr. Wilson offered a resolution in the Senate on the 5th, and the resolution was adopted, for the appointment of a committee of five to inquire about the money had been expended by the Treasury parties to aid or defeat the passage of the Pacific Railroad bill. Mr. Sherman offered a substitute for the bill to create a Court of Claims, for the examination of claims against the government, which was passed. In regard to the public-debt question Mr. Thurman moved to take up the bill. Adjourned to the 9th. In the House debate was resumed on the Tariff-Commission bill. Mr. Hooper offered an amendment that the Commission should report to Congress such recommendations as may seem to them expedient for the encouragement of the various industries. The amendment was rejected. An evening session was agreed to. Pensions were reported. Adjourned to the 9th.

DOMESTIC.

A NEW YORK dispatch of the 31 states that a conference of Democrats under control of Colonel Morris, met the Indians whom Colonel Forsyth was in pursuit of and induced seventy-eight of them, also taking thirty-three prisoners.

A SENATE COMMITTEE of the House of Representatives, after investigating the question of leased land grants, decided to report that the charters of the Northern Pacific and the Atlantic & Pacific were non-forfeitable.

THE Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, of Watertown, N. Y., on the morning of the 31.

THE Lehigh Valley Railroad Company announced on the 1st. Chicago two defeated by Buffalo by 7 to 3. Providence beat Troy by 9 to 3; Worcester punished Boston by 12 to 5; Detroit vanquished Cleveland by the same score.

THREE old books which arrived in New York from Europe by mail were found to have been sandwiched out and filled with the proceeds and jewelry valued at $3,500.

AN exodus is headed about six thousand immigrants at Castle Garden on the 31.

FOR the twelve months ended March 31 the excess of exports of domestic merchandise of United States over imports was $60,882,173. The excess of imports of gold and silver coin and bullion over exports during the same period was $27,468,671.

IT appears to be a fact, all accounts concurring, that the fruit buds have been effectually killed by the recent cold weather in Michigan and some other Western localities.

MARTIN FAET, a negro stepping-up colored boarding-house in Pittsburgh, Pa., on the 31 bought arsenic and gave it to a girl named Watkins to put in the bread, and one person was poisoned, seven of whom it proved fatal to kill.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR on the 31 issued a proclamation ordering the Indians "concubines" of Arizona to disband and return peaceably to their respective homes on or before the 15th inst.

An emigrant train on the Santa Fe Railroad was attacked at Gloreta on the 31, was robbed of $1,000 and several horses were stolen from the passengers about $500 in money and ALFRED DRAKE, a schoolboy at St. Paul, was shot on the 31 to induce Jessie Faulkner to elope with him. Both lived north of her, in Sterling, a wound in the shoulder, and then killed himself in the stairway.

A LOUISVILLE, N. M., dispatch of the 30 states that a careful summary shows a total of 141 whites and 36 negroes killed in Texas during the previous two weeks. Five hundred horses, 4 of stock and 2,000 sheep killed, and over $25,000 worth of property was destroyed.

A FEW days ago the steam fire-engine house at Newark, N. J., with all the implements for extinguishing conflagrations, was swept away by the flood, leaving it in ruins.

A FAVORITE agent here was in Washington on the 31 from Captain Howgate begging for aid. Five dollars was all he was given, and he passed his request to the public-domain bureau of the Department of the Interior, to be considered. Adjourned to the 9th. In the House debate was resumed on the Tariff-Commission bill. Mr. Hooper offered an amendment that the Commission should report to Congress such recommendations as may seem to them expedient for the encouragement of the various industries. An evening session was agreed to. Pensions were reported. Adjourned to the 9th.

Muskegon has forty-five saloons.

The value of our lake marine is estimated at $100,000,000.

It is said that 55,000 women find paying employment in New York city.

The Irish people of this country, as a class, denounce the late assassination in strong terms.

A jail-bread at Brookhaven, Miss., Sunday night ate three negroes perished in the flames.

There were eight gaping wounds in the body of Secretary Cavendish and eleven in that of Burke.

Mr. Parnell told the British Parliament that the double assassination was the work of his opponents.

It is estimated that people of the District of Columbia squander $30,000 every month in lottery tickets.

The court-house at Pittsburg was partially destroyed by fire Sunday. Loss $200,000, insured for $50,000.

American Fenians are considered responsible for the butchery of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Burke.

A Methodist minister, of Lenawee county, has come to grief. On his return from Europe he was arrested for arson.

Senator Chilcott, of Colorado, was a day laborer in 1860. He owns now some of the most valuable property in Pueblo.

The archbishop's horse, just back of the cathedral on Fifth avenue, New York city, cost $10,000. It is of white marble.

A sexton in a New York church where many fashionable weddings occur, boasts that he has made over $600 in fees since Easter.

A man named Charles Moore has been arrested at Maynooth, near Dublin, who is suspected of being one of the Cavendish and Burke assassins.

"He is a chip of the old block." He has let no opportunity pass to show the Southern people kindness," says the Vicksburg Herald of Secretary Lincoln.

The mother of Jennie Cramer, telling her last sad words to her erring daughter to the Judge, with young Malley and Blanche Douglass as listeners, is a picture to make angels weep.

A gigantic swindle has been unearthed at St. Louis, in the way of Government land scrip speculations. It is claimed the perpetrators have realized form $300,000 to $500,000 in their operations.

Train wreckers have made deliberate and repeated attempts to wreck passenger train on the C. & N. W. R. R. within the past few days. The only wonder is that serious accidents have not happened.

Parnell says of the Assassination: "I am horrified more than I can express. This is one of the most atrocious crimes ever committed. Its effect must certainly be most damaging to the Irish people.

At the recent royal wedding, the Princess Beatrice wore a dress which once belonged to Catharine of Aragon, one of the wives of Henry VIII, an old gold and pink satin covered with $100,000 worth of d'Alencon lace.

A fire at Montague Sunday destroyed nearly the entire lumber yards of A. J. and C. E. Covell of Montague, Mich., with 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 feet of lumber. The loss is over $50,000. Insured in eight companies for $30,000.

In the Peruvian Company investigation Monday, Senator Blair acknowledged he had accepted $100,000 worth of Shipherd's stock, but had not been influenced by mere money considerations. He saw Peru "the under dog" and his sympathies were enlisted in her behalf.

Two Indiana farmers got into a quarrel, Monday when one of them gave the other a severe beating. The injured man went to his house, procured a revolver, and went straight to the house of his antagonist took deliberate aim and shot him through the head, from the effects of which he died in an hour.

The smallest baby in the world was recently born in a mining camp Carbonate, Nev. The father is a miner, and weighs 194 pounds. The mother is a short, healthy woman weighing perhaps 160 pounds. The child is male, as perfectly shaped as any human being can be, but upon its birth it only weighed eight ounces. Its face is about the size of a horse chestnut, and a ring worn on the little finger of its mother was easily slipped over its foot nearly up to the knee.

In the State of Indiana there are 141,129 dogs, and it is estimated that it costs $5,131,573.50 per year to maintain them in the comforts and luxuries to which an Indiana dog is fiercely entitled. Now let us have a census of the sheep an their mortality statistics.

The old state house at Boston is to be restored outside and in, to its exact appearance in the good old colony times when George the Third was king. Bits of dado, balustrades, cornice, stairways and an occasional knob or latch of the original structure have been found, and will render the perfect restoration easy and complete.

The Chicago Journal says: "It now looks as if the national debt reduction for the present fiscal year, ending with next month, would amount to the magnificent sum of $150,000,000." This is rather too much magnificence. The country would be better off if it reduced taxation and paid no more than $50,000,000 on the principal of the debt.

The Democrats of Oregon have hung out the free-trade banner, and doubtless have done so at the dictation of the party leaders in the East. The Republican platform declares for the protection of American industries and labor, and the contest will be fought on that issue. It will be a mere skirmish, however, in view of the great battle that will be fought at the polls in November.

In the Washington jail the other day a young man named Wilson tried to hang himself. While the body was lying on the floor of his cell, and the doctors were bending over it trying to restore life, Guiteau, whose cell is near by, was let out in to the corridor by his own request. He was very talkative and closed his remarks with "perhaps it will be my turn next." This comes nearer to prophecy than any thing else the wretch has uttered.

They have no compassion for murderers, in China. A story comes from Pekin. An undutiful son was made by his abused father to set up a separate establishment for himself. One day the son beat the father to death with a piece of pottery. While drunk he confessed the crime. The authorities sentenced him to undergo the "slow and ignominious process of being gradually cut to pieces. In China the law's delays are effective.

The Ohio Prohibitionists have issued a call for a State convention, and it is probable that they will nominate a full State ticket. The net results of the Prohibition movement in that State since 1869, was the election of Allen, one of the worst "dyed in the wool" Democrats to be found, for Governor. Now if the leaders of the Prohibition party desire to defeat the Republican candidate for Governor this year, and this is the only end they can achieve, it is possible they may succeed in it.

Alfred Drake, a 16 year old pupil in school at St. Paul, has cherished a boyish attachment for some time for a fellow pupil named Jennie Faulkner. The girl's parents lately interfered to check the intimacy. The boy sought an interview with the girl on Wednesday to urge a secret marriage and elopement. When she refused he became frantic and fired three shots at her with a revolver, one of which made a flesh wound in her shoulder. The shooting occured on the sidewalk and the girl ran into the house. The boy ran down the street pursued by bystanders a short distance, then put the revolver to his head, killing himself instantly.

The Colored Member Takes His Seat.

The Republican party has in part redeemed its pledge to the colored race in 1869 by sending Judge E. Dargan, of the Shreveport District of Mississippi, to the United States as a member of Congress in place of General Chalmers. It was to be expected that with the restoration of a Republican majority in the House the Confederate Brigadier would not be allowed to take his seat, but the colored people could not be driven back to the support of the Democratic party by virtue of which Chalmers holds his seat. So long as a war is in the majority Chalmers could not be disturbed, and he went out of office gracefully in spite of the ominous cursed the party responsible for his defeat. Tonight he had constitutional grand crimes against the Southern people and the consequent representative government, or political treason and cowardly in Southern politics, but our Democratic friends have invented yet worse. Hon. Three-quarters of that party in the House attempted to filibuster against the admission of Judge Dargan, but the more sensible members perceived the folly, and the party adopted a course sad sullenly, voted in the negative. The Republican party would well have afforded to ignore the whole business and the great wrong committed in the Shreveport District had been repaired by the seating of Judge Dargan.

When the final vote was taken, and Dargan was called forward to take the oath, there was a scene of great excitement in the House. With his eyes fastened upon the Speaker and his hand uplifted, he subscribed to the broad oath. There was a certain absurdity of requiring this man to swear that he had never given voluntary support to any person engaged in armed hostility thereto, or yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power or constitution within the United States hostile or inimical thereto. But the grandeur of the occasion and the loyalists. Though it is no longer required of ex-Confederates, it is a proper virtue in any those who can truthfully accept it as a condition.

Judge Dargan was sworn immediately, and way soon after was seen passing between the officers of the House and the conference room on the Post office Appropriation bill. This is the first vote given by a man who has been or may be under some Rebellion went out in 1870. Here the Democrats have a majority in the Senate, but it, also dropped out in 1868, leaving the Confederate Brigadiers in undisputed possession of both houses. These were the last of a line of eighteen members including Rainey, Elliott, Rainer, Cain, the Lynches and Smalls of South Carolina, Lynch of Mississippi, Pershing of Alabama, Nash of Louisiana, and Long of Georgia in the House, and Revels and Bruce in the Senate. There were a number of colored characters among these—blind to not to defend. This 18 Republican members from Illinois and Lynch were elected unchallenged (except and adelity), and in a hearing upon their credentials Republican contestants were carried by the sitting members. Of all these Republicans the latter. None of the worst thing that occurred in the House can it because it is said that his seat was of a lower rate than those of some of them who defrauded the colored members of their seats.

The Republican party, having put as largely in the House and increased its majority in consequence of elections in the South to the negroes, but more especially to itself, it has more to its pioneers in the work of reform and hindering minor in the Southern States. The party is founded on the doctrine of equality of human rights. It can do no work more important than to secure to the negro in the other Southern Republicans, white and black, the seats in Congress to which they shall prove to be fairly entitled. So long as the Republican party shall remain in power the Southern members-elect may rest assured that no contest for representation in Congress, supported by sufficient proof of election, will be in vain.—Chicago Tribune.

A Practical Revocation of Civil Service Order No. 1.

The following is the text of First Assistant Postmaster-General Hatton's letter in reply to a communication from the postmaster at Cincinnati in relation to postoffice employés engaging in politics. It is a practical revocation of the Hayes civil service order No. 1:

OFFICE FIRST ASSISTANT POST-MASTER-GENERAL,
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 8, 1880.

SIR,—Your letter of the 3d relative to the duties of postmasters in connection with elections, whether the executive orders (paragraphs 263, 264, 265, 266, and page 103, Regulations of postoffices, a short copy of the regulations governing postoffices, and the duties and discharge of their duties in connection with postoffice laws only, under the limitations accept the offices of delegates, in regard to the provisions of Democratic statutes, in the case of appointments of postmasters, and the duties they are applicable to postmasters and other officers of the postoffice department, and on the last clause of paragraph 263, which is considered by the public opinion should not, in any way, be construed to prevent any person in the postoffice service from the exercise of the rights of citizenship, and the duties imposed by the laws of the United States upon every man to use his best efforts to promote the welfare of the country, and to secure the administration of that which is most for the best interests of the country. Executive orders cannot be construed to prevent the discharge of those duties by any person in the postoffice service, and the duties of postmasters are not changed by the fact that they are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The duties of postmasters are the same as those of other postoffice employés, and they are required to expend their energies in the discharge of their duties in the postoffice, and not in political matters, and are required to be present at their offices during the hours established by the postoffice regulations, and are not authorized to absent themselves from their offices for the purpose of taking part in political matters, and are required to devote their entire time to the postoffice

Lady Frederick Cavendish has written to Earl Spencer that she would not grudge the sacrifice of her husbands life if it only leads to the pacification of Ireland.

More arrests have been made in Ireland of persons suspected of participation in the recent assassination, but nothing positive as regards the guilty ones has as yet been developed.

It is reported that Mr. Teller, the Secretary of the Interior, has decided to disarm all Indians in the Western States and Territories who are subject to the effective control of the Government.

The people on the Pacific Slope are happier than they were. Only a short time ago they were hanging the President in effigy. Now they have been firing salutes in his honor, for his signing of the new Chinese bill.

Another terrible storm has laid the village of Mill Creek Indian Territory, to waste. Every house in the village was either destroyed or badly damaged. Only one building was left standing and that was turned into a hospital.

It is said that Guiteau has his regular days for receiving visits from Congressmen. It is about time that the assassin had his invitation cards engraved for his select party of friends who will visit him in the jail yard on the 30th day of next June.

The poorer Jews in Russia are said to be getting married at the rate of 150 couples per day, and one occasion there were 200. They imagine that land will be given free to them if they are married, upon their immigrating to the United States or to Palestine.

A considerable amount of money and labor has been expended at Grand Haven in making "sand levees" or barriers to keep the shifting sands from filling up the harbor, damming up Grand River and burying the town, but still the sand climbs over the barriers and buries them.

A syndicate, which has secured a monopoly of the railroad business of Newfoundland for forty-five years will build a railroad across the island, which, it is said, will reduce the sea voyage to 1700 miles and shorten the time between New York and London by forty-eight hours.

The President does not affirm give intimations of his course of action in official matters, but it is said by those who have discussed the subject with him that he will not pardon Mason until after Guiteau has been hung. The petitions for Mason's pardon keep coming in, and fill a very large packing case at the White House. A register is kept of the number of names on each petition.

In Philidelphia many children are treated for whooping cough by taking them to the gasworks, where they are allowed to breathe the mingled fumes of ammonia and sulphur from the purifying pans. This clears the air passages and affords relief. It is said that the treatment is recommended by physicians.

We should think the people of unfortunate Ireland would go quite distracted with the quantity and quality of excitement that falls to their share. The assassination of two English noblemen in Dublin park, in broad day light, is a crime so atrocious that even the most radical landleaguer hastens to wash his hands and his conscience of the horrible affair. All the leading London papers, except the Times accept the avowals of the Irish people Gladstone will not retract his coercionary measures, as the appointment of the new secretary of Irish affairs in place of the murdered Lord Cavendish, indicates. A cablegram says the excitement was something akin to that this side the water when Garfield was shot. Meanwhile the continents await with interest and anxiety the capture of the assassins, which will furnish som key to the motives of the murder.
